VERA CRUZ, May 29.—Foreign residents in Vera Cruz, with few exceptions, believe that the Constitutionalist cause, headed by Citizen Carranza, is lost. There may be many months of fighting ahead, it is admitted, but it is the contention of those students of the Mexican situation that the idealistic successor of the dreamer, Madero, is not the Moses who is to lead his chosen people out of the wilderness of rapine and pillage into which the Mexican struggle for "liberty" has degenerated.

Carranza, they say, has become

COMMENT ON THE SITUATION.

The German reply to the Wilson note, made known by a digest cabled from Berlin, engages the major interest of the American people at a time when the war in Europe is threatening to engulf the Balkan states and the anarchy in Mexico has evoked threats from Washington to use the American army and navy to stop it. The German plea to have the issues arbitrated in The Hague, it seems, has caused a division in Mr. Wilson's Cabinet, with Secretary Bryan in favor of the proposition and Mr. Wilson himself opposed.

It may be that President Wilson will not have to go to extremes with the Mexican factions. Vera Cruz advices are that the sway of Carranza is about over and that the rush for the woods with the loot is about to begin. In which event Villa and Zapata would be the only leaders left, and they may be brought to terms. But new ones could arise overnight.

Germanic Allies Close in on Przemysl—Keen Fighting in Galicia.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, May 29, 9:27 p.m.—A Bucharest dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company says important negotiations are in progress between Rumania and Bulgaria. The Bulgarian Minister to Rumania, the dispatch adds, left yesterday for Sofia. Turkey, according to report current, has offered to cede Adrianople to Bulgaria.

UDINE (via Paris) May 29, 10:30 p.m.—A strong Italian army is engaged in crossing the Isonzo River. When this has been accomplished it is expected that the hard struggle will begin. On the right bank of this river Austria lacked a solid fortified base, while on the opposite side near Corizra there is a range of mountains, the highest of which is Monte Santo, with an altitude of more than 2200 feet, joining to the southeast the Corso chain.

A high, rocky plateau dominates Trieste by land. On the Corso the Austrians have the intrenched camps of Sessana and Divaca, which command the whole seacoast on both sides of Trieste. Thus the Austrian troops are in a position to make difficult a landing by sea or an advance from the frontier.

THE LONDON REVIEW.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, May 29, 10:40 p.m.—The battle for the fortress of Przemysl, in Middle Galicia, remains the outstanding feature of the war.

There has been heavy fighting north of Arras, where the French continue to make progress, the Germans admitting tonight their evacuation of Ablain. But this is a small affair compared with what is going on around Przemysl.

The Germans and Austrians, with an enormous weight of artillery, continue to fight desperately in an effort to encircle the fortress, which is already reported to be under bombardment. Their armies on the San, to the north of Przemysl, have, however, apparently received a check. The Russians, after driving them back across the San in the neighborhood of Seniawa, have now turned their attention to the forces which crossed the river to the north and south of Jaroslau and have been delivering furious attacks. All of these Austrians and Germans claim to have repulsed.

To the south of Przemysl, the Teutonic allies are meeting with more success, but the progress is not so rapid as it was a few days ago and the communications to Lemberg, which were reported to have been severed, are still intact.

At the other end of the line in the Baltic provinces, heavy fighting also is in progress, with the fortunes ebbing and flowing, neither side being able to make any important advance. Those operations which were originally classed as a raid by the Russian military critics, are being more seriously considered, and larger forces are being sent to meet the German invaders.

Except for their admission of the evacuation of Ablain, which they say was carried out without the knowledge of the French, the Germans claim to have repulsed all attacks along the western line. As the same claim is made by the French, who also state that they have made further progress, the situation does not seem to be much changed.

It is not expected that the French will make any marked advance at one time, for they are attacking strongly fortified positions, which have to be taken one by one in the face of innumerable and cleverly concealed machine guns.

Outpost fighting continues along the whole front of the Italo-Austrian frontier.

It is reported from Bucharest that important negotiations are under way between Rumania and Bulgaria, but the nature of these has not been divulged.

German submarines are still busy in the waters around the British Isles, the latest victim being the British steamer Ethiope, which was sunk Friday. Sixteen of her crew are still missing.

SINK GERMAN SHIPS IF—ORDER SENT NEW YORK.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, May 29.—The New York Herald says: "Naval officers in New York City were interested today in unexpected orders that came from Washington to sink any German ship that attempts to leave this harbor. The orders were based, it was learned, upon reports submitted to government officials in Washington, that in the event of hostilities between this country and Germany an effort will be made at once to bottle up New York harbor by sinking at an advantageous spot in The Narrows one or more of the big German steamships that have been tied up at Hoboken piers since the European war began. It is admitted that the same orders regarding German steamships attempting to leave the port were transmitted to the commanders of all the forts that guard New York City. Just where the information came from upon which the orders were issued could not be learned."

AWAITS OFFICIAL TEXT OF THE GERMAN NOTE.

Wilson Reserves Comment on the Summary, but it is Known that the American Government is Prepared to Controvert Every One of the Points Mentioned in the Digest of the Berlin Reply.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Until the official text of the German reply to the American note concerning violations of neutral rights in the war zone is received, probably tomorrow, President Wilson will reserve comment.

This word came from the White House tonight after press dispatches, outlining the German note, were received.

It is known, however, that the United States government is prepared to controvert every one of the points mentioned in the summary of the German position as published here. The press outline conforms with Ambassador Gerard's dispatches of the last few days, forecasting the nature of the German reply.

Evidence of an indisputable character was gathered by the Washington government prior to the sending of the note of May 13 to prove that the Lusitania carried no guns, either mounted or unmounted; that she carried no explosives within the meaning of American statutes, and that no British vessels have cleared from American ports for several months carrying guns of any character.

The British Ambassador here is preparing to transmit assurances from the British government that the Lusitania was not armed and that she could not be carried on the naval lists as an auxiliary cruiser unless she were armed and commissioned, the latter change from a peaceful merchantman to an auxiliary cruiser being possible, according to British practice, only in home ports.

The United States, moreover, holds that the carrying of arms or ammunition or other contraband or a few unarmed individuals who might be prospectively soldiers does not destroy the right under international law and humanity of the belligerent merchantman to be visited and searched before being destroyed and the neutral or the combatant passengers transferred to a place of safety.

While the exact phraseology of the German reply is awaited with much interest, there was a feeling of pessimism in many quarters over the evasion of President Wilson's demands for reparation for the loss of more than 100 American lives and guarantees that submarine warfare would be so conducted in the future as to safeguard American lives and vessels.

GRAVE FACTOR.

A grave factor has been added to the situation by the finding of the American commission apointed by Ambassador Page that the American steamer Nebraskan was torpedoed without warning by a submarine. In German quarters the claim was persistent that the vessel must have struck a mine.

Lieut. John H. Towers, naval attache, and Naval Constructor Lewis B. McBride of the American embassy, and Consul Washington at Liverpool have reported through Ambassador Page that after a technical examination of the vessel and on the testimony of the chief engineer of the Nebraskan that he saw the wake of a torpedo, they had no doubt that the ship was attacked by a submarine.

Inasmuch as submarines of the allied powers have not attacked merchantmen, the presumption of officials is similar to that reached after an investigation of the attack on the Gulflight—that a German submarine was responsible—and an inquiry to the German Foreign Office for its report on the case is expected to go forward within a day or two.

The preponderance of evidence showing an attack on the Nebraskan after it was believed that submarine attacks on vessels would cease, at least while negotiations were in progress, admittedly increased the tension in relations with Germany. In German quarters it was suggested that if the ship was attacked by a German submarine, the comander may have been away from his base too long to learn of the new developments and the precautions to be taken with respect to neutral ships.

The fact that the Nebraskan had hauled down her flag at dark was also mentioned as a possible reason for suspecting that she was an enemy vessel, although Captain Greene in his affidavit declares the name of his ship was painted on her sides in letters six feet high and that it was possible for a submarine commander to see them. Incidentally the State Department received from Ambassador Gerard today a circular issued by the German government warning neutral vessels to keep their names illuminated at night and to bear as many distinguishing marks as possible because of the possibility of mistaken attacks.

BRYAN SILENT.

Secretary Bryan declined to comment on the Nebraskan case, referring inquirers to an examination of the facts as given out in a formal statement during the day. He said also that he had received up to a late hour tonight no word as to when the German note would be received here, but on the assumption that it had been presented to Ambassador Gerard this forenoon he estimated that with the time required for translation from the German in Berlin and the enciphering of the communication it might not reach Washington until late tomorrow. Messages have been delayed on an average of 24 hours in coming from Berlin to Washington via Copenhagen and London—the route by which official messages are sent to the State Department.

While officials did not care to comment on the German reply until they had read the text, the forecast of its contents was looked upon in well-informed quarters as not difficult to answer, because the American government had made a careful investigation of the facts in the case before sending its note.

The claim of Germany that the Lusitania was built as an auxiliary cruiser and was carried on the British navy lists as such is met with the statement that the British government had never published the Lusitania on its navy list and that such action was necessary before it could be considered an auxiliary cruiser. Also, the Lusitania carried no guns, either mounted or dismounted, according to the investigattion by Collector Malone at New York before the vessel sailed. There has been a distinct understanding between the United States and Great Britain, it was said, that none of the merchantmen sailing from the United States would be armed. The fact that a merchantman subsequently might become an auxiliary cruiser is recognized as a possibility, but the United States has always understood the British position to be that such a change could not be accomplished dur-

BREW DOUBLE TROUBLE FOR UNITED STATES.

International Difficulties Thickening Fast on Both Sides of the Atlantic.

New Mexican Policy, the German Reply, British Interference with Our Trade, Extension of the Submarine Warfare to the Suez Canal All of Intense Concern to the President and the People.

BY JOHN CALLAN O'LAUGHLIN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE TIMES, May 29.—The international troubles of the United States are thickening fast. Here are the matters of immediate concern to the President and the people:

Definition of a new policy with reference to Mexico.

Attitude to adopt in respect of the unsatisfactory response of Germany to the demands growing out of the Lusitania tragedy.

Measures to be taken with regard to the extension of the submarine "war zone" by Turkey to Egypt and the Suez Canal, and the probability of like action by Austria-Hungary in connection with Italy.

Course to be pursued towards Great Britain as a result of the seizure of American cargoes consigned to neutral countries in Europe.

AS TO MEXICO.

President Wilson has finished his message to the people on the Mexican situation. It is 1500 words in length and describes briefly the intolerable conditions which have been created in the neighboring country by the revolutions and counter-revolutions which have been in progress for five years.

The forecasts of the German note received from Ambassador Gerard confirm press dispatches from Berlin. The text of the document will reach the State Department by tomorrow night. It will be made public at once, in accordance with an agreement between the two governments.

GREATEST CONCERN.

The administration is manifesting the greatest concern over the failure of Germany to comply with its demand for the cessation of submarine warfare. It was anticipated that prompt disavowal and reparation would be made in regard to the Gulflight and Cushing. The great question which has concerned the American people, however, was the loss of American life on the Lusitania and Falaba, particularly the former. Above all, there was united and sweeping condemnation of a maritime practice which sent men, women and children to their death without giving them a chance to escape.

Germany now comes back with two distinct propositions: First, to investigate in accordance with the Hague treaty, which in fact, is arbitration, and secondly, for the United States to obtain permission from Great Britain to permit food supplies to pass to the territory of the central powers of Europe. The latter is absolutely inadmissible according to high authority. The question is not one between the United States and Great Britain, it lies solely between the United States and Germany since it was a German submarine that sank the Lusitania. It is declared positively that the President will not "bargain" about American life.

EMBARRASSMENT.

The proposal for an investigation by the Hague tribunal is exceedingly embarrassing both to the President and Secretary Bryan. Mr. Bryan negotiated treaties with a score of nations providing for the investigation of all disputes whatever their character. He offered to make such a treaty with Germany, but that government declined. What Mr. Bryan did was done with the full knowledge and approval of Mr. Wilson. Now Germany has proposed precisely the kind of an investigation provided for by the Bryan treaties. It is not accompanied by any announcement of purpose to stop submarine warfare against mercantile craft pending the results of the investigation. The question is: Can the President and Secretary Bryan stultify themselves, repudiate the instruments they have negotiated, by rejecting the German proposal? To do so would be to destroy absolutely the work of the administration in connection with the peaceful settlement of all disputes, whether of honor or vital interest. On the other hand, to accept the German proposal would be to bring before an independent tribunal the liability of Great Britain. The London government could not be represented on the investigating committee, yet that committee might make a report holding it in part responsible, because of its failure to provide a torpedo-boat escort for the Lusitania.

COMPLICATIONS.

The proposal of Germany contains germs of serious international complications. Undoubtedly the Foreign Office counselors in the German capital realized how the waters would be muddied for the United States by the kind of reply they made.

Before determining the reply of

SEPARATE PEACE OFFER SPURNED BY THE SLAVS.

Foreign Minister Sazonoff Declares it will be a Long, Hard War, that the Allies are in Accord and Commends Italy for Her Part in Entering the European Conflict.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

MILAN (Italy) May 29 (via Paris.)—Sergius Sazohoff, Russian Foreign Minister, interviewed by a correspondent of the Secolo, is quoted as saying it was true Austria and Germany attempted to conclude a separate peace with Russia, but that such a thing was impossible.

"All the allies are entirely in accord," M. Sazonoff continued, "consequently the war will continue until it is possible to conclude a really lasting peace. It will be a hard, long war, as the enemy is still strong. Knowledge of his strength must make us stronger and more persevering in our efforts to reach a definite result."

COMMENDS ITALY.

M. Sazonoff expresed the opinion that Italy in terminating her alliance with Germany and Austria had acted wisely. He asserted Italy's principal compensation for her present trouble would be the acquisition of the commercial influence in the Balkans previously possessed by Austria and Germany.

M. Sazonoff urged that Italy cultivate good relations with the Slavs. Otherwise, he said, the Dalmatian coast, which had been assigned to Italy would be a wall instead of a bridge in her relations with the Balkans.

The Foreign Minister declared that Russia had neither a moral nor a political interest in the Adriatic and he said that with Venice, Pola, Avlona and Otranto in the hands of Italy, the Adriatic might become another close sea.

SAZANOFF'S VIEW.

Continuing, M. Sazonoff said:

"We already have two close seas—the Baltic and the Black Sea. We do not want a third. If it were the Atlantic then it would be a different matter, but with the Adriatic we have nothing to do. The Black Sea is a Russian sea. Russia cannot permit barbarian Turkey to possess the key to this sea. The commercial life of Russia already has suffered by the closing of the Dardanelles, which must end.

"Bulgaria and Rumania have nothing to fear, because all would have equal commercial rights to the Bosporus and Dardanelles, which in the hands of Rusia, would guarantee order and safety to navigation."

Petrograd.

BATTLE OF PRZEMYSL UNDECIDED, RUSSIANS SAY.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PETROGRAD, May 29 (via London, May 30, 4:15 a.m.)—The following official communication was issued tonight:

"The great battle between Sieniawa and Przemsyl was still undecided on May 28. Strong enemy attacks between Przemysl and the great marshes of the Dneister and beyond the Dneister to Dolina were repulsed on May 27 and 28.

"The Russian troops assumed a vigorous offensive on the left bank of the Avitasa and the whole front as far as the River Lomnitza, and captured on the night of May 28, near Perekhinsky, 3200 prisoners, including seventy-two officers, a flag of a Honved regiment and several machine guns."

Intervention Swift and Sure in Mexico Unless Military Leaders Restore Peace

Stern.

WILSON TO SERVE NOTICE FIGHTING MUST CEASE.

Situation Below Border Intolerable to Both Natives and Foreigners.

Statement to be Issued Tuesday Outlining Policy of United States will Put New Aspect on Affairs Which Have Disgraced Stricken Republic and will be Preliminary Move Toward a Stable Government.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Announcement that President Wilson would demand a settlement of the Mexican problem by the warring factions themselves within a short time and failing that, adopt some means, not defined as yet, to bring about peace, has developed acute interest in official and diplomatic quarters as to the prospective action of the United States. The President's appeal for funds and supplies to relieve the starving population of Mexico, the preparation at the White House of a statement to be communicated to all military leaders in Mexico next Tuesday and arrangements of the American Red Cross for a huge relief scheme are the first steps in a policy which, it became known today, President Wilson has had under consideration for some time, with the object of restoring peace in Mexico.

The text of the President's forthcoming statement is an official secret, but from those who advised with him prior to its preparation it is understood Mr. Wilson will address not only the military leaders in Mexico, but the Mexican people, and at the same time the people of the United States. He will review in detail the course of events in Mexico since the assassination of Madero and Suarez and the usurpation of the Presidency by Huerta.

AS TO HUERTA.

The pronouncement, it is said, will call attention to the fact that the United States government, by refusing to recognize Huerta, assisted in driving him out of power, had expected from the victorious Constitutionalists the re-establishment of government in Mexico. Nearly a year has passed since Huerta was compelled to resign, but the Constitutionalists, the statement will say, have failed in the meantime to restore order, conditions growing worse, with no faction apparently possessing the capacity to establish a government.

In view of these conditions, according to reliable information, the statement will serve notice that, as the situation has grown intolerable to foreigners and the Mexican people alike, the Mexican chiefs must arrange for an early solution of the problem. Unless this is forthcoming soon it will be indicated to the military leaders in Mexico that some other means may have to be employed to assist the Mexican people. The President does not intend to specify this government's course for the present.

INTERVENTION IN AIR.

Officials did not deny today that if the Mexican factions failed to compose the situation, there was a possibility of intervention by the United States. It was pointed out, however, that what might have been previously considered by some Mexicans as an aggressive intervention has now changed on account of the famine conditions to a humanitarian expedition, designed to save the Mexican people, helpless in the hands of military bands. It is even suggested in well-informed quarters that one result of the food situation if famine continues would be a direct appeal to the United States government from large numbers of the Mexican people for intervention.

The new phases in the Washington government's policy may take several weeks to develop. For the present efforts will be made to get food to the Mexicans. The seizure by the Carranza authorities of 600 tons of corn purchased by the International Relief Committee is one of the incidents which has aggravated the situation considerably, and it is expected notice will be served on the Mexican generals to permit the transportation of relief supplies or the American government may be constrained to undertake the distribution of supplies through its own agencies.

The plan of President Wilson has been resolved after many conferences with Cabinet officers and others. The report of Duval West, who returned last Tuesday after an investigation of the economic and political union in Mexico, confirmed the impressions of the President that none of the factions seemed able to control the military situation and that famine was threatening in many parts of the republic.

The President is said to be hopeful that the effect of his statement will be to draw the better elements of the Mexican military factions together into some constructive plan for the establishment of a government that could be accorded recognition by the United States.

ARREDONDO'S STATEMENT.

Eliseo Arredondo, head of the Carranza agency here, issued a statement tonight declaring every facility would be afforded by Gen. Carranza to carry on relief work and that President Wilson's appeal was deeply appreciated. Gen. Carranza was held, in the statement, to be innocent of any "charge of neglect or indifference in connection with the unfortunate food situation, and it will be remembered that no such stress exists anywhere in Mexico where the Constitutionalist government is in control."

The statement announced further that Carranza forces under Gen. Pablo Gonzales were moving toward Mexico City to take the capital and relieve distress there. In the meantime, Mr. Arredondo adds, no one "will expect Mr. Carranza to ship from the peaceful territory under his control the food necessary for the inhabitants of Mexico City to feed the bandits who are responsible for the present situation."

Reports of hunger and suffering poured into American Red Cross headquarters today from all parts of Mexico.

RED CROSS APPEAL.

Supplementing its appeal to the American people for aid, the Red Cross sent a telegram to the Governor of every State which read:

"There are a large number of unfortunate people in Mexico facing death by starvation, and the President of the United States and the American Red Cross make an appeal for money and food supplies. Gifts of corn, beans, rice and flour will be acceptable at any point in the United States and forwarded by the Red Cross to Mexico through the most practicable route to reach the people in distress.

"Money may be sent to local Red Cross treasurers or to Red Cross headquarters in Washington. Before donated supplies are sent from any point instructions from Washington will be furnished for routing. The most practicable gateways into Mexico at the present time and under the present conditions are Vera Cruz (via Galveston,) Brownsville, Laredo, Eagle Pass and El Paso, Tex., and Nogales, Ariz."

INTERFERENCE FEARED.

While supplies can enter Mexico through these gateways, the question of whether the Carranza or Villa military forces, as the case may be, will interfere, is still bothering officials. A carload of corn and a carload of beans already are on the way, on assurances of railroad officials that they will go through safely. This will give Monterey three or four days' food supply.

H. W. Catlin, who is interested in a plantation south of Mexico City and recently arrived from Vera Cruz, told Red Cross officials today that beans were being shipped from Vera Cruz to Cuba while people are starving five miles outside of the Carranza capital. There were practically no food supplies to be purchased in Mexico City, he said, and on his own plantation people in desperation had cut the corn before it was ripe.

BRYAN HEARS THE REPORT, ANOTHER AMERICAN KILLED

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The State Department has made inquiry through Consuls at Vera Cruz and Tampico into the reported killing by Mexicans at Tampico of William Byrd, Jr., an American, whose home was at Mineral Wells, Tex. A belated letter from Tampico to his father brought the report which was forwarded to the State Department.

LOSS OF FIVE THOUSAND SUFFERED BY VILLA ARMY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

EL PASO (Tex.) May 29.—The Villa army in assaulting and failing to take the Obregon positions below Leon last week, lost more than 5000 men, according to reliable private advices received here today.

Persons arriving from the south stated that 1000 wounded arrived yesterday at Chihuahua City, while similar numbers have been transported from the battle front to other cities along the Central Railroad. More than 1000 dead, it was estimated, had been left before the Carranza trenches, and these bodies, together with those of horses, have caused a condition threatening an epidemic should the two armies remain for long in their present intrenchments.

The raiding of an English-owned ranch and the killing of a Mexican employee were reported today. Four hundred men under Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez, who was provisional President of Mexico under the convention government, but now working independently of the Villa or Carranza factions, had occupied the Cedros Hacienda west of Camacho, on the Central Railroad. Some of his men cut the railroad between Aguascalientes and Zacatecas, but the damage later was reported repaired by the Villa troops, who are using the line for the transportation of supplies.

Conditions caused by lack of foodstuffs are not reported as critical in Villa territory in North Central Mexico as in the isolated regions of the southern district.

AS TO GIFTS FOR MEXICO.

[EDITORIAL.]

PRESIDENT WILSON, as head of the American Red Cross, has issued an appeal to the American people to contribute cash and supplies of food and wearing apparel for the relief of the people of Mexico, hounded by revolutions and brigandage into the barren dominions of famine and want. The President in no way mistakes the temper and the character of the American people when, in his appeal, he reminds them of their "characteristic generosity and impartial spirit of brotherhood with all nations;" but in view of all the circumstances under which Mexico has been made the theater of pillage, plunder, arson and rapine perpetrated in the precious name of liberty, it does seem at this time and at this distance to be inconsistent, not on the part of the American people to give unto the native sufferers in Mexico, but on the part of President Wilson to ask them to give unless the President is in a position to certify and guarantee that the things given shall reach the very ones for whom they are intended and no one else. And all the more so are the American people entitled to exact a guarantee that their gifts shall reach only the innocent victims of the spoliation falsely called war in Mexico in the light of dispatches that Carranza, on the one side, has confiscated 600 tons of food and provisions imported to relieve want by the foreign colony of Mexico City, and Villa, on the other hand, has seized not only all the available corn and other cereals in the Campas district, but has made away with the seed grain that the natives had sequestered in their hopes and prayers for a better day. Why, then, should the American people give anything without a positive guarantee that their donations will not be diverted into the camps of brigands, arsonists, pillagers and monsters guilty of even worse crimes? It is the true spirit of humanity which prompts them to hesitate and, perhaps, for the first time, to question the wisdom of an appeal for help and the charity of gifts made without some immediate and reasonable assurance that the needy shall enjoy the blessings. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver, but not a giver of gifts the result, but not the purpose, of which is to perpetuate anarchy, to feed the vicious, to strengthen the maurauder, to succor the fiend, to clothe the ghoul, to comfort the thief and to prolong misery on earth and ill-will among men.

Liverpool.

STEAMER ETHIOPE SUNK BY A GERMAN SUBMARINE.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LIVERPOOL, May 29.—The Elder Dempster line steamer Ethiope has been torpedoed and sunk. The chief officer and sixteen men have been picked up. The rest of the crew is supposed to be in boats.

The Ethiope was bound from Hull to Liverpool, whence she was to have sailed for East African ports. The vessel was sunk by the German submarine U124.

The Ethiope, of 2475 tons net, was built in 1906 and was owned in Liverpool. She was 340 feet long. She was last reported as arriving at Hull, Eng., on April 22 from Lagos.

CREW BROUGHT IN.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

FALMOUTH, May 29.—The steamer Saxonian brought into this port late last night Capt. McDonald and sixteen members of the crew of the Ethiope. They were picked up while drifting about in a small boat. Sixteen other members of the crew, in another boat, have not been reported as yet. The Ethiope was proceeding down the channel at 9:30 o'clock last night when the report of a gun was heard and a shot crossed her bows. [illegible] appeared to be about 300 feet long came into sight. The Ethiope attempted to escape, but two more shots were fired and the vessel was stopped. The commander of the submarine gave the men on the Ethiope five minutes in which to take to the boats and then torpedoed the steamer. She sank in five minutes.

THEIR THANKS TO AMERICANS.

French People Grateful for What They Have Done.

Ceremonies in Paris from Morning Until Evening.

An Album of Drawings is Presented to Mr. Sharp.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, May 29, 12:40 p.m.—Both official and unofficial France united today to express appreciation of what Americans have done for the republic since the beginning of the war. The ceremonies began in the morning and did not conclude until the afternoon. An invitation was sent, so far as possible, to every American in Paris and they were present in large numbers. In the morning two large wreaths of flowers were placed at the foot of the equestrian statue of George Washington in the Place d'Iena, one by the municipality of Paris and the other in the name of all the artists of France. The first wreath was carried forward by Leon Bonnat, president of the Institute of France, while Gabriel Hanotaux officiated in the same manner in the name of literary France, as represented by the French Academy. A large gathering of members of the academy, artists and statesmen stood uncovered in the Place d'Iena as the wreaths were deposited, after which they all joined in cheering the United States.

In the afternoon the vast amphitheater of the Sorbonne was filled with 4000 persons invited to be present at the presentation to W. G. Sharp, the American Ambassador, of an album of original drawings by leading French artists and addresses by well-known authors, all expressing the gratitude of France for the help given by Americans in many ways during the war. This function was attended by President Poincare and all the members of the Cabinet and several hundred other Frenchmen distinguished in official or private life.

SPY MANIA INFECTS ITALY.

BUT GERMAN ESPIONAGE WAS APPARENTLY PLENTY.

Signboards Erected Along the Roadways Were Believed to Have been Airship Signals, While Smoke Columns Directed Fire of Cruisers from the Sea.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

ITALIAN FRONTIER, May 29, (Via Chiasso to Paris, May 29.)—The Spy mania which has developed along the Italo-Austrian frontier apparently is justified by the reputed discovery of a carefully planned espionage system developed by Austrians and Germans especially all through the Garda region and along the Adriatic coast. Every summer many Austrians and Hungarians have visited the towns, villages and fishing hamlets, finding lodgings in hotels and the homes of peasants. Most of them amused themselves, it is said, by drawing, painting and taking photographs, while the women cultivated friendly relations with the natives who were their temporary neighbors.

It is now believed that many of these visitors were playing a part in a great espionage organization. There is reason to believe also, the authorities declare that large advertising signs erected along the railway lines, especially near important junctions, really were intended to prove directions for airships or warships by means of a secret code. Buoys anchored off the coast are believed to have been designed to serve as range finders for naval artillery. It is asserted that it was one of these plans which enabled an Austrian warship at Senigallia (sixteen miles northwest of Ancona) to fire with such accuracy as to strike a revolving railway bridge. A transport was passing when the shell struck and eight soldiers were killed while several others were wounded.

SIGNALS BY SMOKE

Residents of Rimini maintain the Austrian squadron was signalled by a dense column of black smoke which poured from chimneys of a factory in which Austrians were employed. Signals are reported to have been given at Ancona by means of rockets fired from the deck of a German steamer interned in that port. Reports are current that Gen. Asinari learned the identity of those responsible and had them shot Thursday At a meeting at Ancona between Gen. Asinari, the mayor of the city, Deputy Pacetti, deputy Boccani, and the archbishop, with revolutionists pledged themselves to give their property and their lives if necessary in the struggle to crush Austria.

A duel between the Austrian and Italian artillery in this region was renedered difficult by heavy rain and stormy weather, the low-lying clouds making it impossible to see beyond a certain distance.

TO ITALY VIA SPAIN.

Ernesto Nathan Cuts Short His Stay in San Francisco to Hurry Back to His Native Land.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—Ernesto Nathan, commissioner-general to the Panama-Pacific Exposition from Italy, left for New York today to take passage home. Commissioner M. Piacentini left for Italy yesterday.

Both commissioners determined to cut short their official stay here when Italy declared war upon Austria. Commissioner Ettori Ferrari, in charge of the Italian art exhibit, will remain here, it was announced today.

Commissioner-General Nathan was accompanied by his secretary, Chevalier Catastini, and others. The entire party, it is said, will take passage to Spain and reach their destination via France.

merely the figurehead of a crafty and scheming clique of Latin-American statesmen whose interests and ambitions lie along the line of personal aggrandizement and profit.

The administration at Washington takes the position that these foreign residents are biased; that consequently their opinions are untrustworthy. That they have seen much and suffered much, however, is unquestionable.

THE REAL SITUATION.

Here is the statement of a man who has lived in the country for eighteen years:

"The real heads of the Constitutionalist government are the men who surround the first chief. They are able and unscrupulous, energetic and audacious, shrewd and cunning.

"Carranza believes himself at the head of a great reform movement and that belief is encouraged by these men who are about him. They need such a man as Carranza for their own purposes.

"Personally an honest man, he has no idea how bad some of his followers are.

"Carranza will stay and will endeavor to do the right thing as long as he is permitted to do so, but the others will continue to deceive and flatter him and will continue to grind out the worthless paper money now being distributed until enough gold has come to them to enable them to head for the Mecca of most educated Mexicans—Paris."

PLANNING A GETAWAY.

A number of individuals close to the administration are alleged to be planning a getaway, and at least one "wise one" of somewhat lesser importance already has departed. His destination was New York. Speaking Spanish and English alternately, the latter with a New Orleans accent, he remarked:

"I ain't taking no chances. Something's coming off in Vera Cruz. Maybe some of my friends will be on top and maybe they won't. Anyway, I want to look it over from New York. It's easier to tell from New York which way to jump, because I may not want to jump back at all."

MUST FIND WAY TO FEED MEXICO.

WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE TIMES, May 29.—"This government is compelled to find a method to get food into the mouths of those who are hungry in Mexico."

This statement by a number of President Wilson's Cabinet can be set down as the main issue involved in President Wilson's appeal through the Red Cross for aid for starving Mexicans and of the statement on the Mexican situation he will issue Tuesday after the Cabinet meeting.

The President's statement will not fix a time limit for compliance with its recommendations, suggestions or demands, unless changed at the last moment.

The statement will be forwarded to the various Mexican leaders through American agents. It is said to be based on the conclusion that conditions in Mexico have come to such a point that the United States, as the southern republic's "next friend," must see to it that there is a change.

An embargo on the exportation of arms from the United States is understood to have been under consideration. The report to President Wilson by Duval West on conditions in Mexico, is said to have pictured the apparent inability of any faction to get command of the situation.

Further announcement was made that 10,000 educators would join in the choruses of the peace songs at the meeting of the National Education Association in San Francisco. The object of the National Peace Jubilee Committee is to help keep the "war madness out of this country." A programme of publicity also is being carried out by the committee.

RENEWAL OF ERUPTION IS NOT LOOKED FOR SOON AGAIN SAYS EXPERT.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

REDDING, Cal., May 29.—Renewal of Lassen Peak's eruptions is not expected soon, Forest Ranger Fred Seaboro, said today after his return from a trip into the crater yesterday. He suggested that the violence of the recent activity had exhausted temporarily the discharging force of the volcano.

Residents of Hat Creek Valley, however, continue their vigilance. Their goods have been packed ready for instant removal.

A year ago tomorrow Lassen Peak broke out with its first eruption since the white race entered California. On May 30, 1914, the re-awakening of the supposedly defunct volcano was discovered by forest outlooks who saw a column of smoke rising. Since then the volcano has erupted 98 known times.

John H. Patterson Opposes Recent Application for Review of Convictions in Ohio Courts.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Briefs were filed in the Supreme Court today in behalf of John H. Patterson and other officers of the National Cash Register Company, in opposition to the recent application of the Department of Justice for a writ of certiorari, to review their convictions under the criminal section of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act in the Federal District Court in Ohio. The conviction later was reversed by the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals.

The reversal of the Federal Circuit Court is held to be final under the terms of the Sherman act. It is also pointed out that the proper place for any further action is before the Federal District Court, as the reversal did not dismiss the indictment or discharge the accused, but merely remanded the case back to the lower court for a new trial.

Fifty-million-dollar Trust for His Infant Sons.

Boy by His First Wife Given Oakland Farm.

All His Employees Receive Wages for Full Year.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, May 29.—The bulk of the estate of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who perished on the Lusitania, and which has been estimated at more than $50,000,000 is left in trust to his infant sons by his second wife, Margaret Emerson Vanderbilt. They are Alfred G., Jr., and George. Mr. Vanderbilt's will was filed for probate today.

William H. Vanderbilt, his son by his first wife, Elsie French Vanderbilt, who was divorced from him, receives a trust fund of $5,000,000 and the Vanderbilt properties known as Oakland Farm. He is 13 years old. The widow receives $3,000,000 and the income of $5,000,000 in trust, together with the Vanderbilt estates in the Adriondacks and Gloucester House in London, Eng. Relatives and friends receive bequests ranging from $1000 to $1,500,000. The two infant sons share alike in the rest. Their legacies will be held in trust for them until they are 21.

The bulk of the Vanderbilt millions came into the possession of Alfred G. Vanderbilt upon the death of his father, Cornelius Vanderbilt, in 1899. At that time young Vanderbilt, just out of Yale, was in Japan on a tour of the world he had planned to last two years. He hurried home and reading the will of his father learned that he would have to wait until he was 30 before he would come into any appreciable part of the fortune. Then he was to receive half. At 35 he was to receive the other half. Mr. Vanderbilt was 37 last October. Cornelius, the other brother, cut off in the will with only $1,000,000, received $6,000,000 more as a gift from Alfred. Cornelius was not mentioned in the will filed today. Employees of Oakland Farm, Sagamore Lodge, Camp Kilikare and Gloucester House in London, who had been in service for five years, were bequeathed a full year's wages.

The will is dated December 16, 1913, and was signed in New York City. The executors are Reginald C. Vanderbilt, Frederick W. Vanderbilt, Henry B. Anderson, Frederick M. Davies and Frederick L. Merriam.

Estimates made when the will was filed, placing the value of the estate at $50,000,000, were declared tonight to be too high. It was pointed out that a considerable sum would have to be substracted from the amount of the original estate because of the substantial settlement believed to have been made upon Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt at the time of her divorce, besides the $6,000,000 payment made out of Alfred Vanderbilt's estate to his brother Cornelius. This left the estimated amount of the estate at between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000.

HALT SEARCH OF SUBMARINE.

BODIES NOT TO BE REMOVED UNTIL BOAT IS DOCKED.

New Hoisting Lines are Dragged Under the F-4 and She will be Inside Honolulu Harbor Now in Several Days, Says Report from Islands.

[BY PACIFIC CABLE.]

HONOLULU (T. H.) May 29.—No bodies of officers and crew of the United States submarine F-4 were found in the forward hold of the vessel when a diver entered it yesterday, according to an announcement by Rear-Admiral B. T. Moore today.

The statement said the diver was unable to enter the middle hold.

Exploration of the interior was halted by orders from the Navy Department to bring the vessel into the harbor for examination to determine the cause of the sinking on March 25.

The plan to take out the bodies before raising the vessel was abandoned.

After further search into the hold of the wrecked submarine had been halted, the work of lifting her closer to the surface was resumed. New hoisting lines were dragged under the craft, Frank Crilly and Gunner Jorgenson of the Maryland making the dives. The latest estimate was that it would be several days before the F-4 would be brought inside the harbor and raised to the surface.

ORDER BY ROOSEVELT.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Acting Secretary Roosevelt directed Rear-Admiral Moore at Honolulu today not to attempt to recover the bodies of the men, who went down in the submarine F-4 on March 25, until the vessel, now in forty-eight feet of water, had been brought to the surface. The Navy Department wants to examine the boat for evidence of the cause of the disaster.

PARADE TO SAVE LAWSON.

Long Lines of People in Denver in Hysterical Protest Against Conviction of Unionist.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DENVER, May 29.—Long lines of marching men and women paraded the streets tonight in protest against the recent conviction of John R. Lawson, union labor leader, in the District Court of Las Animas county, on a charge of murder. Following the parade there was a mass meeting at the municipal auditorium, at which speeches were made by Representative Frank Buchanan of Illinois, Prof. J. H. Brewster of the Colorado State University and Mrs. Lee Champion, president of the Women's Justice League of Colorado.

Lawson, who is the Colorado member of the executive board of the United Mine Workers of America, was a prominent leader in the recent strike of coal miners. On May 3 he was convicted of murder in the first degree, with the penalty fixed at life imprisonment. Lawson was charged with complicity in the killing of John Nimmo, a deputy sheriff, in a strike battle at Ludlow on October 25, 1913.

VON AUFFENBURG HELD A PRISONER.

FORMER AUSTRIAN MINISTER TREATED AS A POLITICAL CRIMINAL.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, May 28.—Gen. Moritz von Auffenburg, former Austro-Hungarian minister of war, and early in the war in command of an Austrian army, has been arrested and is being treated as a "serious political criminal," according to the Frankfurter Zeitung, says the Amsterdam correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Company.

The Frankfurter Zeitung says in its account of the arrest of the former Austro-Hungarian Minister:

"He has been minister of war, chief of the General Staff, and at the beginning of the war given command of an army and until recently was feted with official approval as the victor of Kanarow.' Shortly after this battle, however, he was deprived of his command, owing, it is said, to the failure of an enveloping operation, but nevertheless, on April 22, an imperial decree was issued conferring on him the title of baron."

Events which happened during his tenure in office are given by the Frankfurter Zeitung as grounds for the investigation.

JUDGE HUMPHRIES DIES.

Jurist Who Was Enemy of Socialists Passes Away Suddenly at His Seattle Home.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

SEATTLE, May 29.—Superior Judge John E. Humphries, whose injunctions and contempt of court decisions in a street speaking controversy with Socialists of Seattle drew nation-wide attention during the summer and autumn of 1913, died today of uraemic poisoning, aged 63. He was a native of Calhoun, Ill., and had lived in Seattle twenty-seven years. He was a candidate for Supreme Justice in 1908, but was defeated. Alleging that he had been counted out, he made the alleged injustice done him an issue when he ran for United States Senator in 1910 and for Supreme justice last year.

In July, 1913, following the riots in which men from United States warships wrecked a half dozen meeting places of the Socialist party, and the Industrial Workers of the World, Judge Humphries enjoined Mayor Cotterill from closing the saloons and censoring a daily newspaper. Judge Humphries subsequently caused the imprisonment of 100 Socialists, including several women, one with a baby, for contempt of court in signing a paper denouncing him for his issuance of an injunction in a street-speaking case.

Gov. Lister came to Seattle, held a conference with all the Superior judges and Judge Humphries made an agreement not to act in any labor or street-speaking case during his term on the bench. The State Supreme Court afterward reversed Judge Humphries on all the important issues.

Turks Lose Admiral.

Bucknam, brought the Turkish armored cruiser Medjidieh from Philadelphia, where it was built for the [illegible] Cramps shipyard several years ago.

On arrival here he was asked by Abdul Hamid, the predecessor of the present Turkish Sultan, to enter the Ottoman naval service. He became naval adviser to the former Sultan and in that capacity he was charged with several important missions.

KNOWN IN PHILADELPHIA.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—Ransford D. Bucknam was widely known in this city. He was born in Nova Scotia and had an adventurous career. Bucknam's grandparents gave him the choice of farm life or going to sea and he chose the latter, shipping as a cabin boy. He was twice shipwrecked and finally became captain of a Standard Oil steamship. In 1903 he came to Cramps shipyard and when the Turkish warship Medjidieh was finished in 1903, Capt. Bucknam took her to the Bosporus.

Bucknam was given the task of building up the navy of Turkey. Twice he saved the life of Abdul Hamid, second.

California Must Pay for the "Progressive" Luxury.

New Commission Measures Signed by Governor.

No Thought of Economy in Executive Scheme.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SACRAMENTO, May 28.—California's "progressive" government will cost $6,110,000 more for the next two years than for 1913 and 1914, and $10,700,000 more than for the biennial period of 1911 and 1912. This increase is made mandatory on the State Board of Equalization in the collection of State tax for the next two years by the terms of Assembly Bill No. 1092, which has been signed by Gov. Johnson. Under this bill the Board of Equalization is directed to levy a tax rate sufficient to raise $35,700,000 "for the support of the State government" for the next two fiscal years, beginning July 1, 1915. This period is the sixty-seventh and sixty-eighth fiscal years.

The revenue bill passed by the 1913 Legislature provided for the expenditure of $29,667,700; that of 1911 for the expenditure of $25,062,594. In 1909, the last year under a straight Republican administration, the revenue bill amounted to but $15,009,052, and for 1907 the revenue bill was but $14,777,758. A change in the Constitution relating to the collection of taxes took place in 1910, so the taxes for the years preceding that date were collected on a different basis from the one followed in 1911, when the "progressive" administration begins. The figures for 1907 and 1909 are not directly comparable with those for 1913 and 1915, except for showing the amount of increase between two sessions of the Legislature.

SOME APPROPRIATIONS.

In the following table, however, there has been no change. This is the general appropriation bill for the cost of the maintenance of the State government and State institutions. It includes neither bond issues nor permanent improvements. The figures are from the annual report of the State Controller, except for this year, where they are taken from the bill passed by the Legislature and signed by the Governor.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS.

1913	12,999,660
1911	10,870,850
1909	9,686,575
1907	8,305,164
1905	7,376,052
1903	5,470,996
1901	5,047,467
1899	5,056,944

It will be interesting to note that the general appropriation bill for the next two years just about equals that for four years under Gov. Gage plus two years under Gov. Pardee.

That the increase in expense of the State government has run away from our increase in population during the last ten years is shown by a recent government report on the cost of State governments. This report shows that the per capita tax cost of the government of California has increased from $4.30 in 1903 to nearly $8 in 1913, and that our California's State government costs more per capita than that of any other State except Nevada.

At the time the Legislature adjourned the opinion was generally expressed that the Governor would veto some of the salary increases and payroll increases provided for in the general appropriation budget, but he has signed them all. It has been semi-officially announced, however, that he will veto some of the special appropriation bills, among which are two for $100,000 each for State highway construction in Imperial county. These vetoes were discounted, however, in the revenue bill which the Governor has just signed.

IMPROVEMENTS SLIGHTED.

Despite the unprecedented increase in the cost of the State government for the next two years, the present bill carries almost $1,000,000 less for permanent improvements than two of its predecessors. The great portion of the expense in the general appropriations fund is for increased pay rolls occasioned by the creation of new commissions and departments and increasing the number of employees and their salaries in departments now in existence. That there is no building for the future is plainly set forth in the report of the Board of Control, from which the following are extracts:

"In short, the budget as drawn and herewith presented represents the minimum amount necessary to keep the State's departments and institutions from going backward, the problem of their going ahead being left for normal times. . . . The recommendations for institutions and departments have been held at an absolute minimum."

Here follows a recital that there would be a loss of revenue of $5,000,000. The estimated loss and a few million besides, however, are provided for by increases in taxation rates made by the Legislature.

BOARD OF CONTROL REPORT.

The Board of Control report continues:

"The facts set forth (estimated loss of revenue) are also the reasons for the withholding of approval from requests for appropriations, designed to keep California in the forefront of the States of the Union in the modernizing of her departments and institutions to meet the needs and demands of the public at large. They are also the reason for the failure of recommendation of certain projects, which unquestionably will be undertaken in future years at increased cost."

Secretary of State Frank Jordan is already to the front with the assertion that at least $1,000,000 a year could be saved in the operating expense of the State government by consolidating commissions and departments that have been created during the last three sessions of the Legislature. A similar estimate was made during the recent session of the Legislature, when the Republican minority asserted that a saving of $1,500,000 could be made without hampering seriously any State department.

LOSES FIGHT FOR LIBERTY.

San Francisco Attorney in San Quentin For Perjury not Allowed to Argue His Case.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—Geo. D. Collins, San Francisco attorney, twice denied his liberty from San Quentin prison by the United States Supreme Court, failed again today to win his freedom. Judge Franklin A. Griffin of the Superior Court, in a letter to the prisoner today, refused Collins's prayer that he be allowed to personally argue before the court a motion for a suspension of his fourteen-year sentence for perjury.

Judge Griffin refused the prisoner's plea believing that it would set a dangerous precedent.

Collins steadfastly refused parole, although entitled to that privilege. He went to San Quentin in 1909.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—Congressman J. W. FIVE DROWN AT FERRY.

Horse Backs Off into the Water Near Tacoma, Wash., as Family is Going to Mass.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

TACOMA (Wash.) May 29.—Five persons were drowned in the Cowlitz River, about eight miles from Martin, forty miles south of Tacoma, today, when a horse attached to a vehicle in which they were going to mass backed off the Riffe ferry. The dead are:

Mrs. Henselman, Miss Anna Bergen, and three children, all of whom were under ten years of age.

SHOT IN THE BACK.

Cummings Rancher Who Testified in a Land Suit is Soon Thereafter Done to Death.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

UKIAH (Cal.) May 29.—Clarence Tracy, a Cummings rancher who testified in a government land contest here last week, was shot in the back and killed late last night, while riding home on horseback.

It was thought that the shooting may have been connected with the land suit. Tracy was not regarded as quarrelsome and bore an excellent reputation.

MRS. HUTCHINSON DEAD.

National Treasurer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union Passes Away in Portland, Or.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PORTLAND (Or.) May 29.—Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson, national treasurer of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and ex-president of the State union in Kansas, died here tonight. Mrs. Hutchinson underwent an operation here nearly four weeks ago.

Mrs. Hutchinson's home was in Winfield, Kan. She came here from Seattle to arrange the advertising of the annual convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union in this city next October. Her daughter, Mrs. Roberts, was at her bedside when the end came.

John Griffith McCullough.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, May 29.—Former Gov. John Griffith McCullough of Vermont died at his home here tonight, aged 79 years. Born in Newark, Del., he went to California because of ill-health, after being graduated from the law school of the University of Pennsylvania in 1859. In California he was elected to the Legislature, Senate and the Attorney-Generalship. He returned East in 1873, going to North Bennington, Vt., where he became interested in banking and railroads. From 1902 to 1904 he was Governor of Vermont.

HERMOSA BEACH VOTE.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

HERMOSA BEACH, May 29.—By a vote of 159 for and 87 against, Hermosa Beach decided today to authorize the Board of Trustees to spend 15 cents on every dollar of assessed valuation of property here for music, advertising and parks. A light vote was cast, the number being much less than half of those registered. A strong fight was put up against the measure by local women's clubs, who opposed spending anything for music. Certain misunderstandings regarding how the money to be used would be spent were cleared away before the election and much of the opposition ceased.

It has no means of protecting its audiences from the weather and, outside of its ancient rostrum, has but little claim to attention. Indeed, the smallness, unpretentiousness and other deficiencies have long been the subject of commiseration by our Presidents, and Grand Army officials have devoted years of effort in protest.

FORGOT DATE OF MARRIAGE.

LOS ANGELES HUSBAND UNABLE TO NAME THE YEAR.

Louis Ridlich had Clerks of Chicago Office Hunting Vainly in the Records Until He was Willing to Give it Up—"Keep it Dark," He Said.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO BUREAU OF THE TIMES, May 29.—Louis Ridlich, from Los Angeles, seeking a certification of his marriage for legal purposes, today had the County Clerk's office searching the 1908 books for record of his marriage, which actually took place in 1912.

"By golly, it seems longer ago than that," ejaculated the husband, who is bound for London to settle an estate.

Laughter which greeted his remark reminded the husband of how "friend wife" might view his words. He had been so positive his wedding took place in 1908 that he was willing to leave empty-handed, when a clerk chanced upon his name in the 1912 records.

This showed that Louis Ridlich of Summit, Nev., and Blanche Webster of Chicago were married here the same day his license was issued. He told John Mack, deputy county clerk, that he was now a bond broker in California.

UNITED PRESBYTERIANS.

Spirited Debate At Loveland, Colo. on the Issue of Special Appeals for Religious Funds.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

LOVELAND (Colo.) May 29.—A recommendation that missionary boards of the United Presbyterian Church be forbidden to present their needs through church publications and appeals to congregations caused a spirited debate in the General Assembly today. The recommendation was included in the report of the Missionary and Efficiency Committee and was based upon the argument that separate appeals on behalf of one board would act as a detriment to the other church organizations. The recommendation was opposed by friends of the foreign mission board. The report of the commission on theological seminaries commends the appointment of newly selected professors, notably the Rev. M. G. Kyle at Xenia Seminary and the Rev. J. D. Rankin and the Rev. D. F. McGill at Pittsburgh seminary.

The committees on foreign missions recommended the following nominations: Alice G. Burns, Anna M. Jack, M. D., Helen J. Martin, Mabel S. Stewart, Martha F. Strong, the Rev. J. C. Heinrich, and Mrs. Heinrich, and Helen Smith, to India; Sarah Isabel Dight, Dr. C. E. Wilkerson and Mrs. Wilkerson, to the Sudan; Edna J. Giffen, Elizabeth Robertson, Mrs. F. F. Elder, the Rev. W. B. Jamieson, Gertrude M. Newlin, the Rev. James K. Quay, the Rev. J. Bay Spear and Mina B. Cox to Egypt.

TELLS TALE OF SWINDLERS.

Man Said to be Dr. Boody of Eldorado, Iowa, Declares He Was Thrown From Train.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

OLATHE (Kan.) May 29.—A badly injured man, who said he was Dr. F. D. Boody, of Eldorado, Iowa, and who asserted he was thrown from the window of a passenger train last night by a band of swindlers, was found near here today. The man's speech was rambling. He said that while on his way home from San Francisco he encountered three men and a woman on the train. Last night, he said, they demanded that he pay a sum of money and sign a paper they presented, and when he refused, threw him from the window. About $700 was found in his pockets. The man was taken to a hospital.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—Another destroyer was added to the American navy today when the Jacob Jones was launched at the yard of the New York ship building company at Camden, N. J. The new destroyer is 315 feet long. Her armament will consist of four 4-inch guns and four twin-torpedo tubes. She must make 29 1-2 knots an hour.

The Clerk Guaranteed It.

"A customer came into my store the other day and said to one of my clerks, 'Have you anything that will cure diarrhoea?' And my clerk went and got him a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and said to him, 'if this does not cure you, I will not charge you a cent for it.' So he took it home and came back in a day or two and said he was cured." writes J. H. Berry & Co., Salt Creek, Va. Obtainable everywhere.—[Advertisement.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—Assemblyman Frank M. Rodgers of San Francisco, who was holding a State position as inspector under the San Francisco Harbor Commission, received a letter from the secretary of the commission today notifying him that he was under suspension pending charges of incompetency and inefficiency, which the secretary said the board had instructed him to file against Rodgers. The letter advised Rodgers to appear before the State Civil Service Commission and defend himself. Rodgers said tonight he would not appear before the commission, "because I opposed the commission at Sacramento and it is prejudiced against me."

CONDITIONS IN BELGIUM.

Germans Have Failed so Far to Restore Status Quo.

Too Optimistic View Taken by the Berlin Press.

Situation About the Same in Interior Provinces.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, April 30.—A striking picture of the condition of affairs in Belgium is given by an article in the Berlin Vorwaerts, protesting against too optimistic views in the German press of the Belgian political and economic situation. The extracts from the article as published in London are:

"The attempt to apply the slogan 'Business as usual' to the present state of things in Belgium is due in part to the inability of the newspapers to make the necessary investigations there. We are told that the boulevards of Brussels are crowded and that great numbers of people occupy the chairs in front of the cafes; therefore, we deduce that social life is going on as usual throughout the country.

"But we can correct such a judgment promptly from the figures of the public relief institutions. For an appreciation of the real economic situation in Brussels and of the psychological situation of the people there, a knowledge of public relief is more important than the appearance of the boulevards.

"It is undeniable that in Brussels the number of burghers forced to fetch their food from one of the relief centers is growing. In September the figures were 16.2 per cent.; on April 1 they are 28 per cent. of the population.

"Another point of importance is the increasing dearness of things.

"It is an exaggerated view to take that normal conditions are returning to a city where 210,000 people are fed daily by charity. For this purpose over $13,000 a day is required, and this does not provide for the distribution of clothing, relief of unemployed and care of children. Private charity is almost exhausted, and voluntary collections produce less and less.

"In the Belgian provinces the situation is about the same. The German authorities are willing to improve these conditions, but there are many difficulties. Railway tariffs are constantly altering, so that business people are unable to regulate their traffic in the light of knowledge of the cost of transportation. Public telephone communication is not allowed. Business letters are subject to delay and rigid censorship. Telegrams frequently take three days for delivery.

"Another difficulty is the uncertainty into which industry is thrown by the constant requisition of machinery. The possibility of such requisitioning by the military authorities does not encourage the setting up of new machines or the maintenance of old ones. The revival of Belgian industry of which many of our newspapers speak amounts to this: A number of businesses are working two or three days a week.

"These facts should be a warning against exaggerated optimism as to amelioration of affairs in Belgium. In neutral countries such talk can only have an unfortunate effect.

"The greatest organising genius would not be able to restore the crushed industries of this most troubled of all countries by a wave of the hand, or raise again the courage of a people who are as deeply attached as Germans themselves to their political independence."

PARIS, May 29, 6:35 p.m.—Raymond Poincaire, President of the French republic, replying today to a request made by the National Anti-Alcoholic League, sent through his secretary the following letter:

That is an engagement the President takes willingly and without difficulty, not only for the duration of the war, but even afterward. He never drinks alcoholic liquors.

Western Securities Co.,
711 Hollingsworth Building,
Los Angeles, Cal.:

Gentlemen—I have been in the blacksmithing business here in Pahvant Valley for many years, and farming has been only a side occupation with me. However, I have a stand of alfalfa, some of which is 35 years old, and it is just as good and prolific today as ever. I produced 80 tons of alfalfa from my 40 acres last season; I let 25 acres go to seed, from which I got 330 bushels of strictly high-grade seed. It went 14 bushels to the acre, for which I received 11½ cents per pound, uncleaned. My net profits from seed amounted to $2350. My hay at $9 a ton was worth $720. I watered my field about the 1st of May, giving it one irrigation. I cultivated merely with a common harrow. This is the best and surest alfalfa seed country that I know of. I have been in this country since December, 1877. That I feel 71 years young I ascribe to the high elevation, pure air, perfect climate, and pure water.

This is certainly an extra fine sugar beet country, and for hogs and dairying it cannot be excelled.

My commission expires November 9, 1918.

Pahvant Valley is on the main line of the Salt Lake Railroad in Southwestern Utah—under $1,000,000 irrigation system. Estimated annual cost of maintenance from 40 to 50 cents per acre.

$70 Per Acre for Land and Perpetual (Gravity) Water Right. $25 An Acre Down. Balance in 10 Years.

Are you tired of the "high cost of irrigation?" Are you struggling with a worn-out, "lazy," unresponsive soil?

Do you want fertile, virgin land with perpetual gravity water right—purchasable on terms covering a period of ten years, that amount to actually less than the yearly cost of irrigation by pumping in California? When your land is paid for, your annual water cost for all time to come (according to engineers' estimate,) should not exceed 40 to 50 cents per acre—the actual maintenance cost of the system.

Do you want land in a section where record crop yields on sugar beets, grain, alfalfa and alfalfa seed are the rule? Do you want a better, "easier" and safer hog country than Iowa? Do you want the best dairying country in the West? Do you know that the State of Utah has approved this wonderful million-dollar gravity water system, both as to safety and quantity of water supply?

Do you know that ranchers from the best sections of Southern California are buying Pahvant Valley lands? Write for our booklet, "Sworn Statements by Pahvant Valley Farmers." Special excursions at low homeseekers' rates from Los Angeles.

YOUTH JOURNEYS TO TABERNACLE.

STUDENTS OF LONG BEACH AND MARATHON CLUB BOTH AT REVIVAL.

There was a delegation of High School students from Long Beach at the Brown-Curry Tabernacle in Hollywood last night and the Marathon Club of Los Angeles was there in a body. The boys brought their "siren" yell along with them. At the request of the Long Beach students C. P. Curry sang "Throw a Line."

Evangelist Brown took as his text Matthew ii:28-29-30, "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy-laden and I will give you rest. For My yoke is easy and My burden light." He said, in part:

"A man with a message always gets a hearing. Jesus of Nazareth said, 'Come unto Me.' I find there are lots of people staggering along life's pathway under a burden of cares and worries. It is a great thing to know Jesus as a traveling companion who shares all your burdens. People often criticise preachers because they don't save the world faster. You have to have something else besides the gift of gab, something else besides a good line of conversation in order to convert people.

"The world listens and says, 'Mr. Preacher, you put up a good talk. Now show us your samples.' And if you have a lot of old settlers, old, long-faced grouches and old, shop-worn dill pickles in your church they say, 'Your dope don't work.'

"After all, the quickest way to get the world to the Great Rest Giver is to get the church to the Great Rest Giver first.

"I believe the power of healing comes within the realm of divine healing. I don't believe in a long-faced religion. The Bible says rejoice, rejoice, rejoice. A little girl who had been taught that to be religious you must go around with a long, sorrowful face once saw a mule in a field. It was an old, sad-looking animal with lop ears, and the water was running out of its eyes down its face. So the little girl said, 'Old mule, you must have religion.'

"There are lots of people that think just that way.

"I believe in a religion that shines up your face and makes your ears stick up. You can't fool the world, you can't go out and preach 'Come to the Great Rest Giver' till you get rest yourself.

"Know Christ as the One who gives complete rest so you need have no worry or thought of the morrow. You are on the ragged edge of bankruptcy when you have to borrow anything as poor as trouble. There isn't anything in the world that will pull the joy of life out of you like worry. You can go to Jesus Christ and sit down at His feet and stay there till you get rest. There is the cure for all the 'isms' in the world."

There will be a union mass meeting of all the churches in the tabernacle at 11 a.m. and again at 3 p.m. and in the evening at 7:30. Also a rally of the young people's societies at the M. E. Church, South, at 6 p.m., conducted by James Garth, the piano player.

SEA CASTS UP BODY.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA MONICA, May 29.—The sea today revealed a portion of its secret when the high tide deposited upon the sandy shore near the foot of California avenue the body of an unknown man. It had been in the water a week or longer and was evidently that of a man beyond middle life. He was smooth shaven and of light complexion, weight about 145 pounds and height five feet and seven inches. The clothing was of blue serge and the pockets contained no money, jewelry or any articles which might assist in revealing his identity. All upper teeth between the molars are missing. Three of his teeth are gold crowned. The clothing and underwear being of good quality, indicate that the body is perhaps that of no longshoreman or laborer.

SCORPION HAS CLOSE CALL FROM ALLIES' SUBMARINE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The American station ship Scorpion narrowly escaped damage by a submarine on May 24 at Constantinople. Ambassador Morgenthau reported to the State Department today that the ship was requested to shift her anchorage on account of possible damage also from fire of shore batteries.

The State Department issued this statement today on the Scorpion incident:

"The department is advised by the Ambassador in Constantinople that the afternoon of May 24 a submarine entered the Bosporus from the Sea of Marmora and several torpedoes were fired in the harbor, one of them seriously damaging a large transport anchored near the Scorpion. The town and shore batteries opened fire, without result. The Scorpion had been requested by the port captain to shift anchorage on account of the possible danger of fire from shore batteries, and will go up to Bebek at once."

On May 27 the British Admiralty reported that a British submarine had dashed into Constantinople harbor and discharged a torpedo at a transport. The latter shot was evidently the one which endangered the Scorpion. The station ship is a converted yacht bought during the Spanish War.

"YOU HELD THEM BACK," FRENCH TELLS HIS TROOPS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, May 29, 7:35 p.m.—Field Marshal Sir John French, commander-in-chief of the British forces in France, in an address to the troops who fought in the second battle of Ypres, which he described as one of the "most desperate fights of the war," declared that they had done much to shorten the war.

"You may have thought," he said, "that because you were not attacking the enemy that you were not helping to shorten the war. On the contrary, by your splendid endurance and bravery you have done a great deal to shorten the war.

"In this second battle of Ypres the Germans tried by every means in their power to get possession of that unfortunate town. They concentrated large forces of troops and artillery and further than that, they had recourse to that mean and dastardly practice hitherto unheard of in civilized warfare, namely, the use of asphyxiating gases.

"You have performed the most difficult, arduous and terrific task of withstanding a stupendous bombardment by heavy artillery, probably the fiercest artillery fire ever directed against troops, and you warded off the enemy's attacks with magnificent bravery."

TEUTONIC ALLIES PLAN A DEFENSIVE CAMPAIGN.

GENEVA, May 29 (via Paris.)—A dispatch received here from Innsbruck, in the Austrian Tyrol, says the Crown Prince of Saxony yesterday joined Field Marshal Baron von Hoetzendorf, the Austrian commander, at Trient. The headquarters of the field marshal are protected against possible aerial attack by a covering of strong wire netting.

All the reserves in the Tyrol and in Carinthia between the ages of 43 and 55 years have been mobilized. Youths of 17 years also are being accepted for military service. The resistance of the Austro-Germans to the Italian advance is becoming stronger. The conviction is growing in Innsbruck that the Teutonic allies intend a defensive campaign against the Italians.

MOBS STORM THE HOMES OF GERMANS IN MILAN.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

MILAN, May 29. (via Paris, May 30, 2:15 a.m.)—Mobs today attacked and sacked the residences of persons of Austrian or German extraction, but in some cases these persons belonged to families who for many generations had been naturalized Italians, some of them having sons in the Italian army.

Gen. Spingardi has redoubled the severity of the military measures. Nearly 1000 of the rioters have been placed under arrest, and cavalry and artillery have been stationed in the streets and at various points of vantage throughout the city. Complete order has been in this way restored.

EDISON HAS WAR PLAN MORE DEADLY THAN GAS.

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, May 29.—Thomas A. Edison, in an interview today, says that he knows of still more cruel methods of warfare than even the present European conflict has disclosed.

"Science can find much more effective ways of destroying life than by the artillery and rifle fire or the use of high explosives," he said. "The possibilities of electricity and chemistry have hardly yet been touched upon in modern warfare. I can tell how they can do a lot better, but I won't do it. I could invent something more deadly than gas bombs, but I don't want to destroy lives. However, if the United States ever gets into any conflict I will do my best to help it make war worse than it is at present."

LACK OF TRAINED SOLDIERS IS DEPLORED BY DANIELS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SOUTH BEND (Ind.) May 29.—Josephus Daniels, secretary of the navy, in an address at a banquet of the South Bend Press Club referred to the "lack of trained men for war," in the United States.

"I do not like to admit that there is a defect in the military system of the United States," Secretary Daniels said, "but if there is a defect it is not in the equipment, but in the lack of trained men for war. In the heart of the American nation is the hope that we will never again go to war, but if we do, it will be necessary that we have young men with military training such as these cadets whom I reviewed at the University of Notre Dame today."

The secretary spoke this afternoon at the unveiling of a monument in honor of the sailors who lost their lives in the destruction of the battleship Maine.

STEAMER MACKINAW SAFE; ENTIRE CREW IS RESCUED.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—The steamer Mackinaw, which drifted south fifty miles in twenty hours after her engines had been disabled by a fire in her hold Friday night, was reported safe tonight under tow to San Francisco by the steam schooner Klamath. It was said she would not arrive until midnight or later.

The fire that threatened to destroy the steamer, bound for Portland in ballast, was quenched at noon. By then the Mackinaw had been carried by a gale about thirty-five miles south of the Golden Gate. A number of steamers stood by, while she was in peril, but Capt. Krebs, her master, declined offers of help until he accepted the tow.

Second Officer William Alford, E. P. Steininger, second assistant engineer, and seven of the Chinese crew, who put off from the burning steamer in a small boat in the night, were picked up by a pilot boat and brought here this afternoon. The two officers testified in a preliminary investigation conducted by Inspectors of Hulls and Boilers Guthrie and Dolan.

A second boat loaded with members of the crew that put off Friday night was picked up by the pilot boat. The men in both boats, exhausted by long hours at the oars in the heavy seas, were too weak to manipulate their boats alongside the pilot boat and the latter had to drift down on them, drop two of its crew into the open boats and assist the men over the side of the rescuing vessel.

Reports that a third boat had put off from the Mackinaw led to a long search by vessels which rushed to the Mackinaw's assistance, but late today it was established that only two boats had put off from the burning steamer.

PATTONSBURG, MO., IS SUBMERGED.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

KANSAS CITY (Mo.) May 29.—Increasing fears of disastrous conditions from high waters along the Missouri River eastward from Kansas City arose today from reports to the United States weather observer, indicating a further rise in the rivers to the north due to heavy rains in Western Iowa and Nebraska. It is believed that the crest will be reached here at about twenty-five and one-half feet some time tomorrow. Reports reached here of high water and submerged lowlands along the Lower Missouri, near Jefferson City, and along the Osage River.

The local weather observer asserted that the Kansas River and all its tributaries, with a few local exceptions, are below flood stage and no further danger need be anticipated there. The most serious situation reported today was at Pattonsburg, Mo., where the flood waters of the Grand River have submerged the entire town, and where a shortage of food is reported.

LEVEES BREAK AT LITTLE ROCK.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

LITTLE ROCK (Ark.) May 29.—Serious conditions caused by the high water are reported from virtually every point on the Arkansas River. Levees have broken, the telephone and telegraph wires are down and train service has been hampered. Between Fort Smith and Heavener, Okla., the Kansas City Southern Railway has discontinued service temporarily. The river here has stood at 24.1 feet today. It is expected to reach 27 feet by Monday. At Pine Bluff lower portions of the city are under water. At Rob Roy, the southern end of the Plum Bay Levee has caved in. Ten thousand sacks and a force of men were rushed to the break.

VANDALIA (Ill.) May 29.—The Kaskaskia River broke through two places near here tonight and inundated 20,000,000 acres of farm lands. It is estimated the damage to crops alone will exceed $100,000.

SPECULATORS IN STOCKS BECOMING MORE WA

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, May 29.—With Monday's holiday impending and the continued delay in the German reply to Washington's note of inquiry, operators in stocks were plainly disposed to move warily this week. Reports indicated that the German question was imparting a similar spirit of caution to business operations. The Nebraskan incident was accepted as a further complication. Investment demand was affected to even a greater extent than the operations of the professional fraternity. Chances for outstanding adjustments of corporations' finances were also considered to be somewhat impaired.

Reopening of the Rock Island investigation and the uncertainty attending the future of other secondary railroads exercised a like effect. Italy's belligerency was expected to cut off some of our commerce that moved through that country. On the whole, however, financial opinion looked for small change from present trade conditions to result either from Italy's step or from a possible rupture of our relations with Germany. The foreign exchange situation was enveloped in obscurity. Private credit arrangements were believed to figure in the ready cash payments by foreign governments for war supplies. OUTLINE OF GERMAN NOTE; DIRECT ANSWER IS DEFERRED.

BERLIN, May 29 (via London.)—The German reply to the American note, sent after the sinking of the Lusitania, was signed by Herr von Jagow, the Foreign Minister, at 11 o'clock last night and delivered to Ambassador Gerard this forenoon for transmission to Washington. A direct answer to the question raised by President Wilson is deferred pending a further exchange of views.

The American representations regarding the torpedoing of the British steamer Falaba, in which an American citizen lost his life, are answered with the statement that it was intended to offer ample time for the passengers and crew to leave the ship.

The action of the captain in attempting to escape, however, necessitated more summary action. Even then the commander of the submarine granted ten minutes for those on board to leave the vessel and subsequently extended the time to twenty-three minutes before sinking the ship.

Germany expresses regrets for "the unintentional attacks" on the American steamer Cushing and the Gulflight. The Cushing was attacked by German airmen in the North Sea and the Gulflight was torpedoed off the Scilly Islands.

Germany disavows any intention to attack harmless neutral craft. She offers to pay compensation wherever she is found to be in the wrong and to refer doubtful cases to The Hague for a decision. The passages in the American note concerning a possible disavowal by Germany of intent to sink the Lusitania and the discontinuance of her present practices of submarine warfare are not mentioned specifically in the reply. The note states that pending the reply of the American government to the German assumptions of fact regarding the real character of the Lusitania and her cargo, no attempt will be made to answer the demands contained in the American communication. These assumptions of fact are as follows:

"The Lusitania was built as an auxiliary cruiser, subsidized and carried on the navy lists as such. She carried, according to German information, two guns mounted and concealed below decks.

British steamers sailing from New York, according to information received from passengers and other sources, repeatedly carried soldiers, artillery, war supplies and contraband to England, the Lusitania on this trip carrying specifically 5400 cases of ammunition in addition to other war supplies and Canadian troops en route to the front.

Reference is here made to the fact that carrying explosives on passenger steamers is contrary to American law. It is intimated that the German government would be glad to receive information as to how it happened that ammunition was permitted to be shipped on the Lusitania, a vessel crowded with passengers.

Strong phrases are used regarding what is considered as apparently the deliberate policy of British shipping companies to protect war shipments by embarking American passengers on the same ships.

Germany contends it is impossible to settle the question whether proper opportunity was given to place the passengers and crew in safety until it is determined whether the regulations adopted after the sinking of the Titanic, regarding a proper supply of boats and water-tight bulkheads, which are now a part of the American law, were observed in the case of the Lusitania.

Finally the American mediatory proposals designed to end submarine warfare and the throttling of food supplies and other conditional contraband for Germany are recalled. The government expresses the desire to know what steps, if any, have been taken to induce Great Britain to embark on negotiations to this end, after Germany indicated her willingness to discuss a settlement on this general basis.

Caution.

LIGHT UP NEUTRAL SHIPS GOING VIA THE WAR ZONE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, May 29.—An urgent warning to American shipping against traversing the naval war zone incautiously and to have all neutral markings displayed as conspicuously as possible, including illumination at night, was communicated to the State Department today by the German government through the American Embassy at Berlin.

The German warning was announced in the following statement made public by the State Department:

"American Ambassador at Berlin has been informed by the German Foreign Office that in view of the fact that during the last few weeks it has repeatedly occurred that neutral ships have been sunk in the waters designated as an area of maritime war by the German Admiralty, on February 4, 1915, and especially in one case, where it was established that the sinking was traceable to an attack by a German submarine which took the neutral ship for an English vessel in the darkness on account of the inadequate illumination of its neutral distinctive markings, it recommended that American shipping circles again be warned against traversing the area of maritime war incautiously, and also be urged to make the neutral markings as plain as possible, and especially to have them illuminated promptly and sufficiently at night."

La Pretre.

FRENCH TROOPS EAGER TO USE THEIR BAYONETS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS May 29.—The official "eye witness" of the French army gives a supplementary report containing details of the capture of the forest of Le Pretre, which for the past seven months has been the scene of continual fighting. The account says:

"Our offensive never relaxed in this region, although many times we suffered severe checks, so our advance necessarily was slow. The heights were heavily fortified by checkerboard trenches, subterranean tunnels between huge trenches and trees which served as breastworks.

"On May 12 the decisive action occurred. Although the Germans had brought up 16 battalions from Metz, we succeeded in gaining the ridges. Among our soldiers who deserve special mention are those of the class of 1915, who were most eager to be allowed to charge, each day asking their officers: 'When will we be able to charge with our bayonets?' Today not only do we occupy the summit, but our lines go slightly beyond. We hold the entire northern slope. The enemy still clings to the eastern and western sides, two hundred prisoners taken by us telling how serious were their losses and how great the attempts they made to hold the positions."

Arras.

FRENCH ON OFFENSIVE, AGAIN MASTERS OF ABLAIN.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

PARIS, May 29, 10:25 p.m.—The War Office issued the following official communication tonight:

"In the sector to the north of Arras we made new progress. After having repulsed with complete success the German counter-attack reported this morning on our trenches at Ablain St. Nazaire, we took the offensive and captured at first the greater part and then all of the houses of Ablain which the enemy held, and we are again the masters, holding the entire village.

"The engagement was very hot and we killed or drove to flight three companies of Germans.

"At Neuville St. Vaast, street fighting has occurred and we took a new group of houses on the western outskirts.

"In the rest of the sector of Arras there is nothing to report except a bombardment by the enemy of extreme violence to which our artillery replied.

"Near Thiescourt, southeast of Lassigny, we brought to the ground an aeroplane of the Aviatik type, which took fire in falling in front of our lines."

the United States, the President will ascertain the view the people take of the German proposals. How Mr. Wilson will stand on the matter is not disclosed, though a member of the Cabinet declared he would not abate a jot or tittle of his demands.

It is now known that Mr. Bryan was opposed to the dispatch of as strong a note to Germany as the President sent and it is regarded as probable that he will urgently insist upon the acceptance of the investigation-arbitration proposal. There is little reason to believe, however, that he will press his views to the point where a split would occur resulting in his retirement from the Cabinet.

AS TO THE NEBRASKAN.

The situation with regard to Germany has been complicated by the report of the American naval officers in connection with the American steamer Nebraskan. Those officers merely sent the facts as their examination developed them, and they indicate that the Nebraskan was torpedoed by a submarine. There is nothing to show that a German submarine fired the torpedo. It might be possible that Germany would charge that a British submarine was responsible, a charge which would be denied by the Admiralty in London, which it is claimed, can show there were no British submarines in the vicinity of the place where the Nebraskan was struck. There is little doubt if a German submarine caused the damage, Berlin will admit it. Germany has declared in case of an "accident" to an American ship, she will make reparation.

OUR COMMERCE IN DANGER.

For Turkey to establish a "war zone" about Egypt and the Mediterranean entrance of the Suez Canal is to impose additional dangers upon American commerce. It will be necessary to send to Constantinople a note similar to that sent to Berlin upon the declaration of a "war zone" about the British Isles. Turkey will be told, as was Germany, that she will be held to "strict accountability" if any American ships are damaged or destroyed or any American lives lost. The United States has a heavy Mediterranean trade and cargo boats ply through the Suez Canal. It is expected that as a result of the declaration made by Turkey, a great deal of shipping will go to the east through the Panama Canal, which will mean an increase in the tolls collected by the government there. So far as holding Turkey to a "strict accountability" is concerned, it is evident it would be more difficult to do so than it will be to obtain reparation from Germany. This likewise is true of Austria-Hungary in case that government takes similar action against Italy.

It is evident that conditions are developing which show the more clearly the necessary enforcement of the American demand that submarine attacks on mercantile craft shall cease. In case the central European powers and Turkey should decline, as is expected, then the President will have resort to the measure already forecasted—form a league of neutrals to enunciate and defend neutral rights.

It is realized in administration circles that the situation with reference to Germany and her allies is more serious than it is in relation to Great Britain and the powers associated with her. In the former case neutral life is in grave danger; in the latter it is a question of trade.

MEXICO AGAIN.

There is a great deal of speculation in Washington as to the reasons which prompted the President to inject the Mexican situation into the public mind at this time. The situation was as bad a month ago as it is today and would have been no worse a month hence. The State Department for months has been receiving reports showing that the people were starving to death; that misery prevailed throughout the country and that the factions were impressing peons and making life impossible. The suggestion is made in diplomatic quarters that the administration deemed it important to divert the public mind from Germany, to prevent an explosion resulting from an unsatisfactory response to the demands respecting the Lusitania, and thus to obtain time to deal with the matter in a diplomatic way. However this may be, it is fact that in quarters friendly to the President, though it is admitted that his appeal to the people to supply food to the starving Mexicans sounds the death knell of "watching waiting," it is believed that the public interest will be turned more to the neighboring country than to Germany. The administration is permitting wide-open speculation as to the new Mexican policy it will adopt, but the correspondent is reliably informed that there is no intention to do more than to relieve the needy, refuse recognition to Carranza and Villa and aid the movement of which Senor Iturbide is the head.

The carrying of arms and ammunition is not contrary to American law as the German reports claim, Federal statutes being directed against the transportation of self-exploding material, from which class official rulings for many years have excluded fixed ammunition.

Germany's contention that it is impossible to settle the question of whether proper opportunity was given the passengers to escape until it is determined whether the Lusitania was equipped with lifeboats and appurtenances provided for in regulations adopted after the Titanic sank, was looked upon in official quarters as irrelevant because it was pointed out the torpedoing of the Lusitania without a moments warning made it impossible to launch such lifeboats as the ship did carry.

From the brief outline it was not believed that the German note went beyond the circular of May 11, which promised to express regrets and make reparation for mistaken attacks on neutral vessels. In the American note of May 13 it was pointed out that such promises did not remove the dangers to which Americans and their vessels were subject. The absence in the forthcoming note of any promises to safeguard American lives on unarmed merchantmen of any nationality and the failure to disavow intention to destroy American lives on the Lusitania produces a feeling of distinct disappointment in many quarters.

Speculation was widespread as to the Washington government's course. It was believed the German note would be promptly answered with a statement of the facts as understood by the United States and reiteration of the demand for reparation for past events and guarantees as to the future. This prediction was based, however, on no comment from the White House, but on the general trend of comment among officials familiar with President Wilson's viewpoint as expressed on previous occasions.

ITALIAN TROOPS NEARING TRIENT.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

ITALIAN FRONTIER, May 29 (via Paris.)—Italian troops are advancing in the direction of Trient from the northwest and from the southwest. They are pushing forward to the north of Condino and eastward from Tonale. Condino is about thirty miles southwest of Trient. Tonale is approximately the same distance northwest of Trient.

ITAIANS CAPTURE HYDRO-AEROPLANE

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

ROME, May 29 (via Paris, 6:30 p.m.)—An official communication issued today by Vice-Admiral Thaon di Revel, the chief of the Italian naval staff, says that on May 27 an Austrian hydro-aeroplane was captured near the Italian coast.

PUT NEBRASKAN IN DRYDOCK.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LIVERPOOL, May 30, 12:40 a.m.—The steamer Nebraskan was placed in drydock yesterday at Birkenhead in the presence of the American naval attache, Lieut. John H. Towers, British naval officers and other experts.

The vessel showed a huge gap forward on the starboard side, twenty feet long and twelve feet deep at the bottom of the ship, which at this point had been blown away. All the plates surrounding this gap were curved inward.

None of the officials would say anything about the nature of the explosion.

Duffy's Is Good for Run-Down People

As a tonic for run down people, Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is reliable. This lady gained strength and weight by using Duffy's as directed.

MRS. MARY CARMODY.

She wrote as follows:

"About a year ago I was down with a very heavy cold and I had a bad pain under my shoulder blades. I was under the care of different doctors but did not improve. I was so weak I could hardly stand, and I could not keep anything on my stomach. A druggist near where I lived advised taking a tablespoonful of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey with an egg in milk before meals, and after following his advice I found that I could eat; I overcame my weakness, and gradually gained in weight. I believe that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey as a tonic for run down people is a great thing, and I recommend it to my many friends in Brooklyn and New York. I cannot praise Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey too much."—Mrs. Mary Carmody, 116 N. Elliott Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

taken just before mealtime stimulates the mucous surfaces and little glands of the stomach to healthy action, improving the digestion and assimilation of the food and giving to the system its full proportion of nourishment. This action upon the digestive process is of great importance, as it brings to all the tissues and organs of the body the nutriment necessary to their sustenance and indirectly to the whole system strength and vigor. It is prescribed by doctors and is recognized as a family medicine everywhere.

Sold in SEALED BOTTLES ONLY. Beware of imitations.

"Get Duffy's and Keep Well."

NOTE: Get Duffy's from your local druggist, grocer or dealer. $1.00 per bottle. If he cannot supply you, write us; we will tell you where to get it. Medical booklet free.

CAMPAIGN ENDS WITH A BIG STREET PARADE.

Sebastian Supporters Turn Out en Masse, While the Whiffen Meeting Approximates a Frost — Both Candidates for Mayoralty Issue Statements and Both Expect to Win — Betting Light on Eve of Election.

With blare of trumpets and the glare of red fire, a two-mile parade of automobiles bearing Sebastian banners cruised through the business district last night.

It was the final demonstration of the municipal campaign and the enthusiasm that several thousand persons in the parade stirred in the crowds along the sidewalks gave Chief of Police Sebastian every assurance that he will be elected next Tuesday.

The parade was informal and it was worked into a day of campaigning that found Chief Sebastian tired but happy at last midnight. The Chief was in one of the first machines with Mrs. Sebastian, and both were roundly applauded.

In a final statement last night Chief Sebastian said:

"I ask for election as Mayor because I believe I have had that experience which equips and qualifies me to hold the position. If the people do not believe that I am capable of efficiently handling the affairs of the city, as Mayor, I do not want to be elected.

"I have grown up in this city. Years ago I used to farm the section which is now our residence district. Later, I became a merchant and for a number of years was a grocer in this city. After that I was connected with the Los Angeles street department. Former Mayor George Alexander was my employer at that time. From that position I went into the police department and worked up through the ranks to the position of Chief. I have never been discharged from any position I have held.

"I want to refer once again to the attempt which has been made to drive me from public life, to wreck my home and to effect my complete ruin. This was started weeks ago, when charges, which were later disproven, were made before the county prosecutor. Despite my vindication and acquittal, my enemies are now circulating slanders and slurs against me. My answer to these is that of the twelve men, who heard all of the evidence each has assured me that he will vote or work for my election as Mayor. I would rather have their support than to have the indorsement of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, which my opponent has.

"My vote at the primary was 28,040 and Mr. Whiffen's was 14,591. I hope my friends and supporters will not let this big lead make them overconfident. The underworld and all that constitutes it is fighting in a corner, desperately and unfairly, to defeat me. They should be repudiated and can be repudiated, with great force if my friends and supporters will work and vote."

Mr. Whiffen, his opponent for the Mayoralty, issued a statement in which he said:

"With the campaign virtually closed I am absolutely confident that I am to be elected Mayor. The evidences of support which have come to me are such as to convince me that a very substantial majority of the people of Los Angeles will vote for me, thereby indicating that they believe in my qualifications and my intention to give Los Angeles a sane, business-like government devoted to the best interests of our business men, our laboring people and our people generally."

The Sebastian parade passed Blanchard Hall last night, where a small audience greeted President Whiffen and a number of others. The meeting was not more than half as large as that held the night before by friends of Chief Sebastian, and this fact caused Campaign Manager McAleer of Sebastian's organization to feel great elation.

Much ado was made of the fact that State Senator Benedict did not appear at the Whiffen rally, although the committee had advertised him for an attraction. Frank Allender spoke, however, and had no difficulty in convicting Chief Sebastian, although a jury had cleared him. The meeting was presided over by a well known undertaker, Fred Pierce. Nathan Newby and others, including John W. Snowden, Mr. Whiffen's campaign manager, also spoke.

The Saturday before election there is usually considerable betting, but yesterday little real money hove in sight. The Sebastian adherents were offering to wager any amount on the election of their candidate, but Whiffen money was held at 2 to 1. The only real bets placed were on majorities.

Several bets were laid yesterday that Mr. Whiffen will not poll 40,000 votes and one bet was made that he will not poll over 35,000.

IN THE SCHOOLS.
FIGHT GROWING WARMER.

Candidates on the alleged non-factional ticket for the Board of Education were charged with adopting undignified tactics by a majority of the teachers in the city schools, who say they were misrepresented in a statement issued by the anti-Francis candidates. The teachers issued the following statement:

"A willful misrepresentation is being made by the promoters of the so-called non-factional ticket for Board of Education concerning the support of the teachers in our city schools. In glaring headlines, a card issued claims that 2000 teachers are favoring that ticket. The truth is that less than twenty teachers passed the resolutions that are being heralded as voicing the opinions of 2000 teachers.

"It is also true that the Teachers' Club has a membership of about 1200, and they as a body will not stand by the action of this small committee.

"The undersigned respectfully state to the voters of Los Angeles that we are teachers in the city schools; that we condemn this action of this executive committee as being disloyal to their own membership, and in no sense representing the sentiment of the Teachers' Club or of any considerable number of teachers in our city schools.

"It is our opinion that a candid investigation would show that fully 2200 of the 2500 teachers in our city schools are in full harmony with the policies of Superintendent Francis and that they will vote for the following candidates on the pro-Francis ticket: J. H. Bean, N. E. Crandall, Fred E. Golding, Charles H. V. Lewis, C. J. McCormick, William A. Spalding."

Chairman Lyons of the Public School Committee of 1001 last night charged the opposition with "stooping to tactics usual with the old-time ward politicians." Signing the denial of support of the anti-Francis ticket are scores of teachers. Alma M. Thomas, president of the Manual Arts section of the Teachers' Club, writes that fifty-five of them who were interviewed say they did not indorse. Laura G. Smith, president of the Home Economics teachers, says no indorsement of the anti-Francis ticket has been made by them. George A. Rice, president of the High and Intermediate teachers, protests "against the card circulated about the city claiming that 2000 teachers are in favor of the non-factional candidates." Grace Fulmer, president of the Kindergarten Club, says the 150 members of that body have not indorsed and as if to further nail the current falsehood, Maud Watters of the Special Teachers Club says the anti-Francis ticket has not been indorsed.

VOTE "YES"
FOR TUBERCULOSIS NURSES.

Officers and members of the Los Angeles Society for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis are recommending initiative ordinance No. 5 on the ballot at the forthcoming city election to the favorable attention of the voters. The measure provides for the employment of a municipal tuberculosis visiting nurse for each 100 registered cases of tuberculosis in the city.

There are only two visiting nurses employed now when there is enough work, it is said, to keep eighteen or twenty of them busy. There are now 600 cases waiting the attention of the two nurses. This is about three months' work, if they gave all their time to it.

The society maintains a clinic at No. 737 North Broadway, which is affiliated with the city health department. The clinic is under the management of Dr. Blanche Brown.

"Los Angeles is behind other large cities of the country in the attention it gives to tuberculosis patients," Dr. Brown said yesterday. "Cleveland has twenty-four visiting nurses and Baltimore sixteen. The public does not realize we have a tuberculosis problem here, augmented by the presence of newcomers. Last year there were 997 deaths in the city from tuberculosis and 1700 in Los Angeles county. Last year there were 2100 cases reported in the city and this is supposed to be about one-third of the number here.

"The full quota of nurses needed would cost about $18,000 a year. It would be a great saving to the municipality to spend the money in this way."

Against Jitbus Law.

The Governing Committee of the Los Angeles Realty Board yesterday went on record against the jitney-bus initiative to be voted upon Tuesday. The resolution follows:

"Be it hereby resolved that the Governing Committee of the Los Angeles Realty Board is opposed to the initiative ordinance regarding jitney busses, on the ground that it does not provide for sufficient regulation or the exercise of proper control over jitney busses as public carriers and does not provide for the proper protection of life and property.

"Be it further resolved that this board recommends that the public vote 'No' on said ordinance."

POLITICAL PUTTS
IN THE CAMPAIGN WIND-UP.

"Ex-Comrade" Wheeler wound up a very busy week with a speech at the Normal Hill Civic Center last night. His chances for re-election to the Council, since he obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce from the red card, are very bright.

The Bolo Club, the political annex of the United Spanish War Veterans, has not indorsed Mr. Whiffen, despite the assertion of J. H. Jergins, a member of the Whiffen Committee. The assertion that Mr. Whiffen is responsible for the soldiers' tax exemptions because he is president of the Finance Committee is erroneous. The exemptions are brought about by State law. The Bolo Club members feel very friendly toward Chief Sebastian, but have made no indorsement.

Col. Henry Laub, whose prognostications have always been worth while, asserts that Mr. Whiffen will receive between 21,000 and 24,000 votes Tuesday and that Chief Sebastian will poll between 57,000 and 60,000. "This estimate is not made with a desire to mislead or too add a single vote for Sebastian, but to give the public the true situation as I see it, after having observed the results of a thorough canvass," said Col. Laub. Heretofore his batting average in such things has been well-nigh perfect.

Chief Sebastian will speak at the Jefferson Club in the Germain Building Monday night—his last public appearance in the campaign.

The Third Supervisoral Nonpartisan Taxpayers' League has indorsed Chief Sebastian for Mayor and has especially indorsed E. C. Hampton for the Council, including the incumbents.

CIVIL WAR VETERAN SUCCUMBS AFTER AN ILLNESS OF FIVE YEARS.

Death came peacefully yesterday afternoon to Hampton Hutton, Civil War veteran and pioneer Californian, 68 years old, at No. 4736 Oakwood avenue. He had been confined to his home for five years following a stroke of paralysis. Mr. Hutton leaves a widow, Mrs. Nellie Hutton, and four children—Frank S. Hutton, Mrs. Mary Upham, Mrs. Katherine Griffin and Miss Emily H. Hutton, all of Los Angeles. A brother, Sutherland Hutton, lives in Santa Monica.

Mr. Hutton was 6 years old when he came from the East with his parents and settled in San Francisco. His father was a member of the famous Vigilance Committee which improved conditions in San Francisco in the early days.

During the Civil War Mr. Hutton was commissioned in Co. B, Sixth California Volunteers. After long service in the war his regiment was engaged against the Indians in California and in preserving peace in the Southwest. Mr. Hutton later was superintendent of several large California ranches, including the Tejon Rancho.

Mr. Hutton moved to Los Angeles with his family in 1883. For many years he was an official of the street department and also superintended the construction of some of the early county roads. He was active in organizing early fiestas and was many times marshal of the parades. Mr. Hutton was a member of Bartlett-Logan Post, G.A.R.

HUNDREDS HONOR BRINK'S MEMORY.

GREAT AND SMALL CLUSTER AT CAFE MAN'S BIER.

As He Lived, with Music and Friends, He is Buried—Traffic Stops While Sad Procession Traverses Downtown Streets—Second Public Funeral at Elks' Club.

As he lived, with music and friends, so was John Brink buried. Seldom in the past decade has a local citizen been paid the honor and esteem shown for the former restaurateur at his funeral yesterday. With bands playing, a police escort, 1000 men and many automobiles in line, his body was conveyed through the downtown district to its final resting place in Evergreen Cemetery, the last chapter in the history of an honest man, a clean sportsman and one of the best fellows Los Angeles has ever known.

For the second time in the history of the Elks' Club, that institution opened its dors at a funeral service. The big auditorium was filled and the halls jammed with hundreds of old friends and members of various organizations of which he was an associate. Around the bier were floral tributes of beauty and size, nearly 200 pieces, large and small, some of rarest blossoms, a few of simple flowers.

Bankers and brewers, baseball magnates and umpires, ministers and prize fighters, the colored janitors, who worked about Mr. Brink's old place of business and the diners who tasted his hospitality, representative Shriners and Masons, members of the Chamber of Commerce and numerous other organizations were in the throng. Its cosmopolitanism was indicative of the friendship of the man.

His brother Elks were in charge of the services and they were as beautiful a testimonial as could be given. The White Squadron stood at attention about the bier. Rev. Baker P. Lee offered the invocation after the introductory by Exalted Ruler Michael F. Shannon. The Elks' quartette sang "Abide with Me" and Lillian Scanlon Gee rendered "Beautiful Island, Somewhere," leading up to the eulogy by John G. Mott, Past Exalted Ruler. As he concluded, there was scarcely a dry eye in the place.

"Men are known by many traits and the one standing out in the character of John Brink was that he was an honest man," said Mr. Mott. "Some men are gentlemen by honor and some by birthright. John Brink was one of nature's gentlemen. His belief lay not in mere sounding phrases and idle words, but in good deeds and accomplishments. He was the best type of the clean American sportsman.

"And he was an exemplar as a good citizen. Always a contributor to any civic cause, he was also willing to go on the committees or in the ranks to help make the community, as well as his fellow-man, better and happier. His was the first name to head the lists for charitable purposes and his was a true exemplification of the attributes of Elkdom. He felt himself the instrumentality for kind and sympathetic acts and his faith in fellow-men was unbounded. A faithful husband, a loving father, a true friend, may he rest in peace."

Earl Houk, the blind baritone, sang "The Vacant Chair" and "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Exalted Ruler Shannon called attention to the boutonnieres of amaranth and ivy, symbolic of clinging friendship and life eternal, which the Elks, in passing the bier, deposited thereon. While this ceremonial lasted, Mrs. Gee sang "Thy Will be Done," and after exemplification of the precepts of the order—charity, justice, brotherly love and fidelity—Organist Sibley Pease played the recessional.

The officers, including the Exalted Ruler, who preceded the casket and assisted in the ceremonial, are W. G. Salter, C. J. Pyle, Paul Robinson, Walter Goldsmith, E. B. Lovie, T. I. Hall and Harry Duffield. The Past Exalted Rulers, including John G. Mott, I. H. Polk, Dr. W. F. Kennedy, Thomas Darmody, Milton K. Young, Byron Erkenbrecher, Dr. Ralph Hagan, Will Stephens, M. J. McGarry, Leo Youngworth, John F. Howard, Edward A. Regan, L. L. Brodeen, Edmund B. Drake, J. N. Meredith and Theodore Summerland, were active or honorary pallbearers. Mrs. Brink and the 5-year-old daughter, with a number of other relatives, followed the casket.

The funeral cortege, moving to the strains of Chopin's "Funeral March," was headed by a platoon of mounted police, followed by a band and then the White Squadron. The officers and past exalted rulers surrounded and followed the hearse. Descending Olive street from Third to Fifth, the cortege moved to Spring and along this street, on which, all traffic was halted, to First and out First to the last resting place.

LONG BEACH CLAIMS DEPOSIT AT BANK OF WHICH IT LACKS PROOF.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONG BEACH, May 29.—City officials, having discovered that there is $2531 to the credit of "Fred P. Baldwin, City Clerk," in the First National Bank, plan to file suit against that institution for the money. The bank, refusing to turn over the sum at the demand of the City Treasurer, invites the suit to determine the ownership of the vagrant money.

Until yesterday no one knew of the deposit except the bank officials and Baldwin himself, who is in another State. The books of the city do not show any deficit in the City Clerk's funds on account of Baldwin's tenure as Clerk. Just before Baldwin's term expired he was charged with a shortage of $300, which charge was dropped when he deposited this amount in the City Treasury. Baldwin left the city on account of domestic troubles and an audit of his books by L. S. Hatch, former Mayor and then City Auditor, did not show any shortage.

EAGLE SECRETARY IS UNDER ARREST.

LODGE OFFICERS CHARGE HIM WITH EMBEZZLEMENT AT SAN PEDRO.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LOS ANGELES HARBOR, May 29.—E. Wunderlich, for several years secretary of San Pedro Aerie No. 312, Fraternal Order of Eagles, was arraigned in Judge Crawford's court at University station today upon a charge of embezzlement. The specific amount of the alleged shortage charged in the complaint is only $36, but according to officers of the lodge the shortage in the account of Wunderlich amounts to $1483.50.

Wunderlich was secretary of the lodge for seven years prior to the first of this year, when he was succeeded by Ed Richards. An expert accountant was employed to audit the accounts and the alleged shortage is based upon his reports. Efforts have been made for several weeks to effect a settlement and, having failed, the officers of the lodge carried the case into court.

As not more than $36 was taken at any one time the former secretary cannot be held upon a felony charge and the case will come to trial in Police Court. Wunderlich pleaded not guilty today and asked for a jury trial. The case was transfered to Judge Chesebro's court, where jury cases are heard.

Mr. Wunderlich denies the charge that he is short in his account to the amount shown by the auditor's report. He admits that he may have made errors, but that the large amount alleged is due to a misunderstanding on the part of the accountant of a "splitting" of initiation fees in vogue prior to the administration of the present officers.

Mr. Wunderlich is an old resident of San Pedro and has been prominent in business and social circles for years. He was formerly connected with the State Bank and now runs a cigar and confectionary store.

GLENDALE'S FIRST HAPPY FESTIVAL.

THOUSANDS OF MERRY-MAKERS HELP MAKE PARADE A BIG SUCCESS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

GLENDALE, May 29.—Blaring horns, waving banners and vari-colored ticklers ushered out in a medley of noisy confusion Glendale's first Festival of Fruits and Flowers this evening. All the downtown business streets were packed with thousands of gaily attired merry-makers bent on making the last night a fitting climax to the biggest three days in the city's history.

Queen Sibyl, the Gracious, of Southern California, was the honored guest of the city this afternoon, leading the mile-long parade through the streets of Glendale and Tropico. Queen Barbara of Glendale welcomed the visiting royalty on the steps of the City Hall, and cheer after cheer arose from the thousands lining the streets as the beautifully decorated floats bearing their royal highnesses passed by.

One of the features of the day was the "better baby" parade, in which 125 of the finest babies in Glendale took part. Many of the baby carriages were veritable works of art, and others showed decidedly original tendencies.

The prize for the most original entry was awarded to Vincent Reel, who rode in a prairie schooner drawn by four "Little Red Riding Hoods." The silver loving cup for the most perfect baby was awarded to Joseph L. Sturdevant, six-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Sturdevant, and medals were awarded to Joseph Ashton, Ruth Dionysius, John Kent and Ruth Tower.

The Glendale Chamber of Commerce met the delegates of the twelfth annual convention of Pacific Coast Advertising Men at the city limits this afetrnoon and escorted them as far as Eagle Rock, speeding them on their way.

WANTS LIGHTS FOR HIGHWAYS.

SANTA BARBARA ENTHUSIAST WOULD LIGHT UP ALL ROADS

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA BARBARA, May 29.—Harold Marston, auto enthusiast, is seeking to have the state cooperate with the various cities and counties along the state highway in building a lighting system which will transform every foot of highway into a brilliant boulevard during the night hours. Letters will be sent broadcast to secure united action. If his plans reach fruition, not even mountain passes, numerous miles from a distributing system will be without electric lights.

"The electric power lines will not only prove convenient in illuminating the highways, but charging stations for electric machines could be placed at stated distances along the highways, and in that way furnish encouragement for the general use of electric machines. In this connection highway telephone stations ought to be included," says Marston.

Marston's idea is received with favor by auto owners generally.

Gov. Cantu Lauded for Strong Administration Under Difficulties. Friendship Strengthened After Minor Misunderstanding Among Peace Officers.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CALEXICO, May 29.—After many difficulties Gov. Cantu of Lower California is improving conditions in that part of Mexico. There are so many factions below the line here and many elements trying to make trouble, but the Governor has been far more successful in maintaining peace and order than the governors of any of the other Mexican border states, and for this reason, the citizens of Calexico are desirous of showing their appreciation of his ability and efforts in the face of great difficulties.

That the Governor is desirous of aiding the American officers in enforcing the law is shown by the fact that the night Officer Buck was shot Gov. Cantu furnished the customs men with one of his policemen, who assisted them in searching thoroughly all the dives and dens in Mexicali for the would-be assassins. On numerous other occasions he has shown his willingness to work in harmony with both the city and government officials and extended many courtesies.

Gov. Cantu has also donated the services of his Twenty-fifth Regiment Band on many occasions for use in this city.

Lack of diplomacy on the part of American and Mexican officers recently caused a minor breach, but it was of small consequence and the only feeling expressed by the business men here is one of desire for cordial relationship between the two cities and appreciation of Gov. Cantu's good will.

HOLD CONFERENCE.

A number of Calexico's most prominent citizens, being business men and patriots, yesterday joined in a statement saying that they are confident that such misunderstandings as arise can be settled peaceably and without further feeling. Gov. Cantu, they asserted, attends to his own affairs.

Yesterday at a meething held in Gov. Cantu's office were Gov. Cantu, Senor Guajardo, judge of the first instance of Mexicali; Deputy Collector Evans of Tia Juana, Deputy Collector Macumber of Calexico and A. F. Andrade, depositario of the Sociadad de Iragacion. Many matters of mutual importance to both American and Mexican interests were discussed in harmony and with the assurance of all parties present of hearty co-operation.

Deputy Collector Evans stated that the lid has not been lifted in Tia Juana and that he has personal knowledge that Gov. Cantu discharged the Chief of Police and all subordinates of that city because they allowed deplorable conditions to exist there and failed to report such matters to him.

Gov. Cantu stated further that he will not allow any such conditions to exist there again. Evans made it his particular business to thank Gov. Cantu for his efforts in cleaning up the district in the neighborhood of Tia Juana.

George Davis, a ranchman, denied he told of being fined by Mexican authorities or that any cowpuncher of his had taken part in the arrest recently of a cowpuncher.

General Observance of Day Set for Tomorrow.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SOLDIERS' HOME, May 29.—Memorial Day was observed at the Soldiers' Home today with all the fervor that regard for the nation's departed defenders could inspire. The day was ideally suited to the occasion, and many visitors from Los Angeles and elsewhere witnessed marching by the now aged veterans who took part in the struggle of fifty years ago. Many of the visitors followed in the march to the cemetery and later thronged the Home's beautiful parks until close of day.

The right of line of marchers rested on the Wilshire boulevard at the western entrance to the Home, and at 8:45 a.m. the column moved off in the following order: Home band, Lieut. W. Osterman, director; Gen. P. H. Barry, governor, and staff; platoon of guard, under command of Capt. Fowler; funeral escort, under Sergt. Gallaher; Home companies, from A to K; Sawtelle school children, and ladies in charge; Encampment No. 138, Union Veteran Legion and its Ladies' Auxiliary No. 16; John A. CEMETERY EXERCISES.

Exercises at the cemetery consisted in: Selection, "Rest, Comrades, Rest," Home band; reading of President Lincoln's Gettysburg address by Comrade H. A. Arnold, followed by the impressive services to the dead by the G.A.R. and W.R.C.; W. C. Bryce, commander of H. S. Hawkins Camp, U.S.V.W., made a brief address; salute to the dead by the funeral escort, taps; hymn, "America," by the audience and band followed by benediction ended the formal exercises, and then women and children and veterans proceeded to place flowers on the flag-decked graves. Then followed the march back to camp, where an ample luncheon in Pepper Grove awaited visiting patriotic organizations and school children who had participated in exercises of the morning.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon Memorial Hall was filled to its utmost, where a programme of music, recitations and interesting speeches was presided over by Gen. P. H. Barry as follows:

Music, Home band; "Flag Salute," Daughters of Veterans; song, "Battle Hymn of the Republic," audience and band; invocation, Chaplain Rev. Will A. Knighten; reading of Gen. Logan's memorial order, by Comrade Arnold; address by comrade, Lieut. W. C. Gibbons; poem by Comrade John Daly; decoration of monument to the unknown dead, by ladies and school children; remarks on behalf of Spanish War Veterans, Comrade C. S. Vail; "Memorial Day," recitation, Mrs. Fannie D. Collins; quartette, Daughters of Veterans; "In Memory of an Old Veteran," recitation by G. T. Collins; oration, Duane Ballard; "Something Doing," by Sawtelle school girls; song, "America," by audience and the band; closing prayer, Rev. Patrick Hawe.

GIBBONS'S ADDRESS.

The principal address, by Lieut. W. C. Gibbons, a veteran of the Civil War, was an elcquent tribute to departed comrades, and was a remarkable example of mental activity and vigor in one who has rounded out eighty-one years of a busy life. The address, in part, follows:

"Time brings to us once more this thirtieth day of May. Memorial Day, with its sunshine, its loving hearts, its tender memories and its flowers.

"What a sad, strange, yet sweet retrospect our country takes up today! What memories, what heartaches, mingled here and there with a dash of sunshine, are crowded in this bit of our country's history. The ceremonies of this day call to mind the universal principle incorporated in our Declaration of Independence; a declaration for the violation of which we suffered as few nations have suffered, and came near making shipwreck of the best form of government the sun shines upon.

"This 30th day of May is in a certain sense a jubilee, sacred to the memory of the noble defenders of their country's honor, and upon whose graves we are, today, placing the fairest tribute of flowers we can gather, as a love offering—sacred to the pathway of the nation's progress through a nation's tears. There are few homes in our fair land today where the tear of sympathy, fresh from the crystal fountain of our affection, does not moisten the garlands of flowers with which we decorate the graves of our comrades in arms and loved ones.

"This is also a day when we imbibe from these beautiful ceremonies fresh courage, when the sorrows and regrets of the past are lost in the newborn hopefulness of the present. Here, all differences cease; here, the nobility of our nature is manifest. These flowers bloom for love, never for hate. The sentiment of Memorial day will be sacred as long as flowers bloom and evergreens beautify the earth. . . .

"Fifty years of experience and prosperity, following the war, have healed many wounds, and today North and South are harmoniously united under 'the flag of our Union forever.'

"As man in his true nature represents the highest principle, so the flag of our country must ever wave over us as the embodiment of rights so sacred and hopes so dear that no mercenary hand will ever dare undertake to exalt another in its place."

REDLANDS' PLANS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, May 29.—Plans have been made to celebrate Memorial Day here on Monday, May 31, and the G.A.R. and W.R.C. of this city are busy making arrangements for the programme. The graves at Hillside will be visited early in the morning and then there will be a parade with the veterans escorted by Co. G and the school children to Library Park, where exercises will be held. The programme has not been completed for this, but there will be a Memorial Day address by Dr. W. B. Craig, ex-college president. The children will also cover a mound with flowers.

The business men of the city have united and will observe the day by closing all the stores. The banks will be closed all day, there will be but one delivery of mail, and the day will be general observed.

AT SAN PEDRO.

LOS ANGELES HARBOR, May 29.—Marines from the U.S.S. Cheyenne and the marine band from the U.S.S. Iris will take part in the memorial services here tomorrow.

Rev. Dr. McLain will be the orator of the day.

After the exercises at the wharf the graves in Harbor View Cemetery at San Pedro will be decorated.

TWO PROGRAMMES.

COVINA, May 29.—Patriotic songs that were popular in the days of the Civil War were sung by the Covina Male Quartette, and by groups of school children at the memorial exercises held by the Twentieth Century Club in the Hudson school auditorium Thursday evening. The affair was under the direction of Mrs. Peter Feddersohn. Capt. Newton Colver of the Sawtelle Soldiers' Home delivered an address.

The annual services in memory of the fallen soldiers of the Civil War will be held in Oakdale Cemetery on Monday morning at 10 o'clock, under the direction of Old Glory Circle of ladies of Glendora, the Azusa Volunteers and the Veterans' Association.

SICK; ENDS LIFE.

Confined to Bed and Despondent, Man Sends Bullet Through Mouth Into His Head.

According to the police, who investigated, Johnson had been confined to his bed some time, and his sickness, they think, deranged his mind. Somewhere in the city he leaves a daughter, Miss Helen Johnson, and at No. 1817 Wilton place, a cousin, J. L. Spencer.

DIVORCE SOUGHT BY BORAX BARON.

ACTION NO SURPRISE TO HIS FRIENDS—ALLEGATIONS KEPT GUARDED.

Thomas Thorkildsen, president of the Sterling Borax Company, through Attorneys S. E. Vermilyea, W. W. Griffin and Theodore Martin, filed suit for divorce against Selida E. Thorkildsen yesterday. This action on the part of the wealthy borax man has been expected by his friends, who had heard whispers of his unhappy domestic life.

Some months ago it was necessary for Mr. Thorkildsen to leave his beautiful home above Beverly Hills. This was the old Nares place, and was entirely remodeled by Mr. Thorkildsen for his wife and afterward given to her.

The divorce papers are voluminous. Mr. Thorkildsen's attorneys declined to give any information bearing on the allegations contained in the complaint. It is learned through other sources, however, that Mr. Thorkildsen's marriage has cost him a fortune, and that the happy future he planned turned to ashes.

On the 25th inst. he attended the marriage of his niece, Miss Bertha L. Garinger, to Judge W. W. Griffin of Carson City. Mr. Thorkildsen gave her away and he was the only member of the family who knew of the wedding. Later a message was sent to the bride's mother asking forgiveness. Mr. Thorkildsen tendered his handsome yacht for the honeymoon trip.

DISTRESSING RASH COVERED FACE
Head and Ears of Child. Kept Getting Worse. Very Irritating. Face Quite Disfigured. Used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. Trouble Entirely Healed.

Clay Center, Neb.—"I want to tell what Cuticura Soap and Ointment has done for my little girl. Her face, head and ears were just completely covered with a sore eruption. It made its appearance in the form of a rash and kept getting worse and spread until her face and ears were almost a solid mass, very irritating and causing great itching and distress. It made her restless at night and her face was quite disfigured.
"I tried different remedies suggested but nothing we did brought any relief. Finally I decided to give Cuticura Soap and Ointment a trial. I washed her face with Cuticura Soap, dried it lightly and applied Cuticura Ointment. I could notice an improvement with the first application and in two weeks' time the trouble was entirely healed." The former sup- al motive force for the ment; the latter saw to it that the project was kept ever before the people. Yesterday Mr. Whitley was the host at a mammoth barbecue to an assembly of 5000 automobilists about midway of the canyon, while the Automobile Club handled all parade and parking arrangements.

One thousand automobiles in one procession would make any affair notable. Along the "boulevarded" length of the Sherman Way they made an imposing procession. Winding about the curves of the new road they gave the impression that all the automobiles in the world had turned out for the affair.

BARBECUE.

But even more impressive was the assembly under the oaks in the broad meadow, half-way down the canyon, where the barbecue and speaking took place. It was an assembly that consumed 500 loaves of bread and half a ton of beef made into 7500 sandwiches and drank almost Gargantuan quantities of coffee and lemonade. It was an outpouring of acclaim to those who made the new road possible.

It was also an impressive procession when it debauched onto the sea walk at Ocean Park late in the afternoon and took its way down it to the point of disbandment, after having been greeted by cheers in three cities—Santa Monica, Ocean Park and Venice.

As for the road, its length from Owensmouth to the ocean is sixteen miles. The maximum grade is 6 per cent., except for a few yards of 10 per cent. gradient. Two steam shovels were used in construction, which took but a few weeks short of a year, and required the use of 81,350 pounds of giant powder and 134,325 pounds of black powder, among other things.

The actual opening of the new road took place when the famous pathfinding car of the Automobile Club of Southern California, "Cactus Kate," led the way through a gate that barred the San Fernando entrance to

SPECIAL TAXES SWELL REVENUE.

CUSTOMS RECEIPTS ALSO SHOW GAIN; LARGE INCREASE IN EXPORTS.

The collections for this month by the Collector of the Internal Revenue amounted to $223,235.20, as compared with $141,274.07 for the same month in 1914 and $90,504.14 in May, 1913. The big increase is due to the collection of special taxes and the payment of income tax by those who want to get in out of the wet before they become delinquent and are assessed a heavy penalty.

The figures for the month of May furnished by the Collector of Customs show there has been an increase of more than 100 per cent. in the value of exports from this port as compared with the same month last year. The figures for May, 1915, place the exports at $280,509.06, as compared with $125,036 for May, 1914, and $131,361 for May, 1913. Of the exports, Los Angeles leads with $176,330; Calexico is second with $64,559; Tia Juana, third, $22,932; San Diego, fourth, $6969; Andrade, fifth, $5257, and Campo, sixth, $4549. The principal exports were to the following countries: Mexico, $134,210; England, $50,000; Canada, $40,000; Japan, $28,000. One thousand bales of cotton were sent to England, crude oil to Chile, distillate to Japan, fertilizers and fuel oil to Hawaii, automobiles, oranges and crude oil to Canada, cement, gas engines, machinery, railroad rails, manufactured iron, steel and lumber to Mexico.

The shipments through the Panama Canal to Atlantic ports were valued at $326,267 during the month just closing.

The collections for May, 1915, were $43,495.98, as compared with $32,530.97 for the preceding month, and $51,170.18 for May of last year. The collections are divided up as follows: Los Angeles, $34,210.40; San Diego, $2407.58; Calexico, $6200; Tia Juana, $604.93; Tecate, $10.40, and Andrade, $2.67.

"DRY" FORCES FACE CRISIS.

Sore Old Feud Expected to Reopen at Fresno.

Prohibitionists Unwilling to Give Quarter.

While Recent Defeat Cools Hopes of Liberals.

Over 250 delegates from Los Angeles county to the California Dry Federation at Fresno Wednesday will leave tomorrow and Tuesday to engage in what is expected to be one of the most critical struggles ever known in California over the method of attack upon the manufacture and sale of liquor.

It is believed the old-time feud between the Anti-Saloon League and the Prohibition party leaders will reach another crisis at the Fresno convention.

Congressman Randall will lead the fight at Fresno for the adoption of the Good Templar resolution. The International Order of Good Templars, said by its supporters to be the "most active and influential temperance organization in the State," not only objects to the various prohibitory amendments submitted by the Committee of Thirty-three, but offers a resolution in lieu thereof, which is proposed as a constitutional amendment.

The Pasadena lodge of Good Templars submitted the counter-amendment to other lodges and it has been generally indorsed throughout Southern California.

NO COMPROMISE.

The Good Templars are opposed to any form of compromise on the liquor question. The compromise reached by the Committee of Thirty-three was on confiscation of property.

"If property is to be considered," says the open letter of the Good Templars to the delegates to the Fresno convention," then the investments in saloon fixtures, breweries and distilleries must be taken into account. If it is a question of the greatest

DIVINATION PROFESSOR ON POLITICS AND WAR.

BY GORDON RAY YOUNG.

FOUR THOUSAND years ago the Chinese embodied the secrets of divination in a book known as Yi-King. Ekigaker, as this science of divination is called, was known to and, report has it, was practiced by Confucius. In Los Angeles yesterday Prof. Donsho Kodama of Tokio, formerly adviser to Yuan Shi Kai, President of the Chinese republic, and for twenty-one years an adept in this science, made use of the ancient secrets to predict that:

Chief Sebastian will win the Mayoralty by a narrow margin.

Los Angeles will enjoy unprecedented prosperity during the years 1917, 1918 and 1919.

William H. Taft will be re-elected President in 1916.

Peace will be restored in Mexico next year and the development of that country will bring great wealth and commerce to Southern California.

The war in Europe will soon be halted by mediation, which will gradually be transmuted into permanent peace.

Prof. Kodama doesn't appear to be a prophet without honor in his own country. He has a letter from the late Marquis Komura, formerly Minister of Foreign Affairs and chief of the plenipotentiaries negotiating the Portsmouth treaty of peace with Russia, expressing admiration for his skill and accuracy in the science of divination and assuring the professor that all predictions relative to Komura's affairs had come true.

He has similiar expressions of favor from President Yuan Shi Kai, the former Emperor of Korea, and the Vice-President of the Chinese Republic. Yuan Shi Kai, so I was in-

All Hail the Child!

SCHOOL CHILDREN IN COLORFUL SPECTACLES.

Ten Thousand to Take Part in Varied Events of Week. Programme Includes Great Historical Pageant, "The March of Empire," on a Scale Never Before Attempted; Also Beautiful Parades.

TEN thousand children, a hundred floats, three big shows at the Stadium, and two monster parades all rolled into one. Such are the ingredients of the programme of entertainment that Los Angeles offers the world this week.

By the willing sufferance of all, it will be children's week; the one of the glad year 1915 set aside, specifically, to them. It will be a showing of the Southland's best known product in pageant and parade and dance; the exhibition of a commodity that will never grow shopworn as long as the earth wheels around the sun. Following is the programme in a nutshell:

Wednesday, 10 a. m., "Southern California, the Home of Youth," a great street parade, two miles long, in which more than seventy schools will take part.

Thursday, 2 p. m., "The March of Empire" at Stadium; a pageant of history in which 1600 children will take part.

Friday, 2 p. m., pageant at Stadium.

Saturday, 10 a. m., elaborate floral parade by Los Angeles county schools, showing wealth of flowers and beauty of Southland children.

2 p. m., pageant at Stadium.

8 p.m., repetition of electrical pageant, "Queen Flora, a Feast of Flowers."

Other cities have had children's pageants and parades on large scales, but never before in history have the children of a city and a county the size of Las Angeles joined in such an affair. Consequently, officials of the city and county schools, and of the various organizations interested, are justified in maintaining that this show will dwarf all previous attempts of like kind.

Wednesday is the opening date of the affair, which is of such proportions that it will run four full days. The opening number is a street parade, "Southern California, the Home of Youth"; a moving spectacle of the beneficence of nature and the ideal life of the child in the Southland, constructed, decorated, and produced entirely by students and teachers of the Los Angeles schools.

PAGEANT PREMIER

The following day, 6500 students will participate in the premier of the big pageant, "The March of Empire," at the Stadium. This pageant will show the western progress of civilization from antiquity to the present in a series of gorgeously costumed and highly colored scenes. This pageant will be continued through Saturday.

The offering this last day will also include the complement piece to Wednesday's parade, a beautiful moving floral spectacle designed to show the magnificence of the flowers of the Southland and the beauty if its children. More than thirty floats are entered in this parade and seventy in the Wednesday parade. Saturday evening, the electrical pageant, "Queen Flora, a Feast of Flowers," will be given its second showing. All parades will pass the big reviewing stand on Hill street, between Eleventh and Twelfth streets, and will traverse the business district.

Wednesday's parade promises much. Youth, the natural gifts of the Southland, the legendary lore of childhood, the romantic historical heritage of our racial ancestors will all be revealed in pictural allegory, bright in color, lively in action, and vivified with imaginative story appeal. Nor will the practical be slighted, for some floats will carry students busy at the forge, the designing-table, and the desk.

The ideas and all the labor on the ingenious and beautiful displays will be furnished by the students. The girls are busy sewing on the costumes, the boys are building the structural parts of the floats in the school shops, and both teachers and pupils are busy searching the libraries for the most curiously fantastic or artistic characters of fairyland and romantic history to impersonate. The work is being done under the direction of the following teachers: Roger J. Sterrett, director and designer; Irvin Hague, manager, and J. C. Reinhard, marshal. With them are associated hundreds of teachers.

THE PARADE.

Headed by the Los Angeles State Normal School with its classic float, "Peace," attended by over 100 students marching and mounted on horses, the parade will be over two miles long and include entries from nine high schools, eight intermediate schools and over fifty grammar schools.

Among features of especial interest will be a floral float showing children working in the garden of a vine-wreathed bungalow. This is the entry of the City Beautiful Committee of the 1915 General Committee of Los Angeles City and County to impress upon citizens that civic pride begins at home in the heart of the child.

The beneficence of nature toward the young in Southern California will be beautifully symbolized by a division of the procession entitled "The Garden of Youth." About twenty schools have entered floats in this division and their very names are suggestive of interesting variety—"Queen of the Garden," "June Roses," "Rose Mount," "Poppy Peak," "Dutch Garden" and others.

Dainty in illusive prismatic colors and glistening raindrops will be the "Rainbow" from one school, followed by the smiling golden blossoms of "Sunshine" from another. "Goldie Locks and the Three Bears" will also make their bows; "The Old Woman in the Shoe," "The Pied Piper of Hamelin" and "Rip Van Winkle" will also be present. There will also be a trilogy of floats showing scenes from Greek mythology.

Passing from the luminous haze of folklore to the bright light of historic romance will come the division showing the "History of the Races." There will be a concept of old Japan with its picturesque costumes and customs, and, like a page from the "Oke-yo-e," will be the float of the "Magic Mirror," with its lanterns and pendulous flowering canopy field, with flower-like maidens and the rickshaw-drawers. Needless to say, our own interesting history will not be neglected.

From the realms of the practical will be drawn some boys from "The Old Swimming Hole" as an exhibit of the truancy department of the schools, while manual and craftwork will be shown in detail, even down to cooking and gardening.

Details of what the county schools are preparing for their floral pageant are shrouded in mystery, for the reason that rivalry is intense and each school is planning to outdo the other.

China to California, the march of the host of civilization westward across the steppes of Asia into Europe, to the further isles of that continent, then across the Atlantic to the New World. Such is the theme of the children's pageant, "The March of Empire, or Westward the Star of Empire Takes Its Way." It will be presented at 2 p.m., on three succeeding days so that all may see it. George Winterburn of the art department of the Polytechnic High School designed the pageant.

Through an archway strung with Chinese lanterns, a procession of old China will enter as the beginning of the pageant and deploy to admit the passage of another procession. This will include the Chinese dragon, boys flying kites, a Chinese mandarin and his wife traveling in state in Sedan chairs, accompanied by a retinue in multi-colored garments. Then will come carts loaded with the products of China.

The Japanese section will follow, emphasizing the love of beauty of those artistic people. One group will include Geisha girls at a festival, another girls in a fan dance, still others dainty maidens riding in rickshaws.

Greece is next represented by the Greek maidens in their processional and rhythmic dances, their games and out-of-door amusements; expressing their love of harmony and beauty. The Greek youths are shown in their athletic games, throwing the discus, hurling the javelin, wrestling, etc.

After this the Roman epoch is introduced showing the great race of empire builders and military predominance. This is pictured by a great Roman triumph; the return of the Roman legion with the captives and spoils of war.

Next is presented the birth of Western Europe; the Paganism of the Celts, pictured by the procession of Druid priests, bards and seers with queen and her warriors going to offer a human sacrifice and to consult the oracles of the gods. The spirit of adventure, represented by the Vikings with their dragon of the sea, returning victorious from a raid, filled with booty and rejoicing warriors, comes next.

AGE OF CHIVALRY.

Following this comes the Age of Chivalry, showing the European nations under the domination of knight's vow, "For King, for Church, for Lady Fair, See that Thou Fight." First, the king, presenting a tilt or tourney between mounted knights. Lines of heralds precede the king, who rides along, accompanied only by squires and standard bearer. An escort of knights in armor, follows, then the lady and a band of maidens carrying floral arches and dancing, the whole symbolizing youth and beauty. Third is pictured the church, with Crusaders with their banners, riding abreast with Saracens, palmers and pardoners and friars of many orders.

Then comes Spain, the land of the troubadors and of restless adventure. In succession comes the Moorish occupation; the days of church dominance; the spirit of enterprise, represented by the episode of Ferdinand and Isabella and the dream of a western world moving them to equip the outfitting of Columbus's three ships. These are to be shown and naturally bring the movement out to our own land.

America is typified by showing the Pilgrims in their early struggles and their formal, earnest lives; then the colonial period, with its stately minuet, its gallant and old nobility, with traveling party in one of the coaches of the day; then the Indians and their conflicts with the pioneer still pushing westward; and finally, the passing over the plains by means of the prairie schooner, bringing the pageant to California, which will be shown by the Spanish caballeros and dark beauties in costume and with their national dances. A group of mission fathers will naturally be shown, with their contributions to development of the States, also the miners, with their hardihood and rugged courage, and the great wheat and later the horticultural development. Then comes the picturing of the physical beauties of our State, from the mountain snows, our poppies and wild flowers, to the restless sea on this far side of the continent, all expressed in symbol and costume.

The climax will be a great rhythmic movement of these latter groups in the center, with all the preceding countermarching in circles around it—a great display of moving color.

The lines of march for the various parades are as follows:

This pageant has been worked out entirely by school children and will be presented by them.

VALUABLE BOOK BY DR. NORMAN BRIDGE.

[Reviewed by The Times.]

Few writers are men or women of original thought. They are reproducers of the ideas of other people. They are reservoirs of stored ideas, not living springs. They are sometimes—consciously or unconsciously—plagiarists. An instance of this kind may be found in the witticism that "the Democratic party is like a mule, it has no pride of ancestry or hope of posterity." Emory Stous of Chicago won great applause for this jest, but a critic called attention to the fact that Ingersoll had said the same thing at Cooper Institute the previous year. Then it was shown that Ingersoll obtained it from an old copy of the Louisville Courier when that journal was edited by George D. Prentice, and that Mr. Prentice obtained it from a speech of Horace Walpole. Then a Latin scholar found it in the "Conversations of Cicero." Where Cicero got it, nobody knows, possibly from Ptolemy, or David, or Moses.

There is one writer—whom Los Angeles is proud to claim as a citizen—who owes nothing to any other writer, from Bacon to Emerson. It is Dr. Norman Bridge. He is wholly original, both in thought and expression. He has just published a book which is a classic. It is modestly entitled "Fragments," but each "fragment" of the twenty-four essays which it contains is a perfect and complete essay.

The article on "The Burdens of Conversation" truthfully asserts that "vocal interchange of thoughts ought always to be a blessing, yet it has to its debit a great variety of calamities. It leads its burden bearers into false positions every day of their lives; it gives their world a wrong impression and estimate of them—they pass often for less worthy people than they really are."

Dr. Bridge says that "in our tensive civilization we tend to conversation frenzy. To be able to talk, and to talk, has come to be a duty; and it appears to be not only a duty to do it, but to do it well, and the effort makes some of us a world of trouble."

Dr. Bridge gives the following formula—which he states he quotes from an obscure book—as a cure for the talk ailment:

"The recovery from this particular talk disease depends much on the ability of the victim to evoke conversation by others, while he has pleasure in holding his tongue and keeping his own powers in reserve."

To excel in conversation by keeping your mouth shut is a prescription difficult to swallow. "A bore," said a wit, "is a person who insists upon talking about himself when you want to talk about yourself."

In his essay on hypercriticism Dr. Bridge says: "The standards of a man at successive periods of his life or of his artistic growth differ. He grows as his experience enlarges; whether he grows upward or sidewise, or in a gyrating fashion, depends on numerous circumstances. But he changes more or less through the years unavoidably, and he is sure to think he grows."

Critics are not always honest. An American lady in Paris, while in conversation with a musical composer, asked his opinion of another composer. He curtly condemned the other to low mediocrity. The lady soon, afterward met the other composer and asked his opinion of the first. She was surprised to have him praise the other man generously—saying that his works were of the highest artistic quality. The lady laughed and told frankly the story of the other conversation, whereupon the latter looked serious and said, "Did he really say that about me? Well, madame, you know we are both consummate liars."

Dr. Bridge is an ardent advocate of conservation. Not of forests, or coal or oil lands, or water powers, but "conservation for the individual."

The man who is a toiler is the most important thing in the community. "He is," says Dr. Norman Bridge, "the most important thing in the community: he is the bulwark of the state and society; collectively he furnishes the sterling men and women who come up to take the places of the larger affairs of life, of the vanishing families that are weakened by alleged over-prosperity, by too much and foolishly-spent money, by vanity and other forms of dissipation."

Every man who works at anything ought to become an introspective student of his own powers, duties, achievements and pleasures. He should make it a cardinal part of his programme of life to cut out the things that are unpurposeful, and make every moment and act count for the conservation of this quaternity of purposes; not for powers alone, not for duties, achievements or pleasures, but for that due combination of them that alone can most nearly represent a perfect man. "It is a matter of self-discipline and development," says Dr. Bridge; "the man can have little help from others; he must walk alone under his own conscience and fixed purposes, and be glad, but not vain, of every step of progress."

Dr. Bridge's advice to college students, given in an address to them at Berkeley, is "Avoid conceit; don't imagine that you know all of any subject. LET HER EMBARGO!

Italy has embargoed the exportation of olive oil. If she extends the embargo to citrus fruit there will be no outburst of grief or indignation in this section of God's country.

REMARKABLE CASE:

The New York judges admit that they are not overworked. This places them in a class by themselves. It is enough to make one wonder just what is back of the confession.

A MEAN REFLECTION.

Two men kidnaped a lawyer at Stockton and now we suppose that every paragrapher in the State will be commenting on the fact that the abductors didn't care what kind of company they kept.

FOR EVERYBODY.

San Bernardino has gone on record as favoring the Victor Valley irrigation project. The reclamation and development of a large tract of good land anywhere in California is of material benefit to every city in the State, and such a plan should have the hearty support of all communities. The land, as the first source of wealth, should always be held in respect, and every acre reclaimed reckoned as a common asset.

MAKING HAY.

Now is the time for cutting oats, and it is good to hear the song of the mower in the fields, and to see the prostrate grain garnered in golden heaps. Of course, the mower is good only for green hay, and not for oats that are to be threshed for their grain. In spite of the fact that the hay crop was never better in Southern California, prices are holding up wonderfully. The farmer is to have a year of genuine prosperity.

GUESSING THE WEATHER.

Probably everybody knows that the sunshine of summer withers and blights carnations. We know this, and we know that the gardeners know it, but what we don't know is how the gardeners knew ten days ahead of time that the hot spell was coming, so that they might cut all of their carnations and hurry them to market, even though they had to sell them at fifty blossoms for 10 cents. Have the Japanese gardeners around Los Angeles a source of information that can beat the National Weather Bureau by a full week? There is profit in prophets.

PATRIOTIC SUICIDE.

Italy has issued a queer order barring from Italian vessels in the United States all Germans, Austrians and Turks, even if naturalized citizens of the United States, and all native-born citizens whose fathers or grandfathers were Germans, Austrians or Turks. This prohibition extends to women and children as well.

The object of this order is not clear. One would think that it would be Germany and Austria that would bar Germans and Austrians from sailing on Italian vessels, so that when an Italian ship is sunk by a German submarine no Germans would be slain. Maybe Italy fears that some devoted German or Austrian would take a suit case filled with dynamite on board an Italian vessel and in a fit of patriotic devotion to Italy blow himself up along with the ship.

ABOLISHING GRADE CROSSINGS.

The chief railroad engineer of the Board of Public Utilities, Franklin D. Howell, has submitted to the board some suggestions which are worthy of consideration. The building of subways and an interurban subway loop are recommended, as also the construction of viaducts over grade crossings, and the elevation or depressing of interurban tracks.

There should be an official railroad grade in the Los Angeles River bed where there is ample room above the highest flood for a double or triple or even quadruple track on both banks.

Mr. Howell recommends that steam railroad tracks be permitted at street level, but to cross the streets only, and that no longitudinal rights of way along the streets be granted. The Times would amend that plan by prohibiting steam railroad approaches at street level altogether.

USE AND ABUSE.

Whenever ex-President Taft delivers an opinion it is always sound and legal. At the annual banquet of the National Association of Manufacturers his summing up of labor union activities exactly fitted the facts in the case.

He recognized the great capacity for good in all combination of workers to better their conditions, financially and socially, and he deplored the tyranny over society with which the success of the movement has intoxicated its leaders. When they attempt to be a law unto themselves and to override the common law of the people they must for the general good be uncompromisingly restrained.

Until the leaders agree to discontinue a campaign of violence and intimidation and to fill their proper office for bettering the position of the members under recognised principles of law, labor-unionism will never fill the place it ought to fill among the useful institutions of this free country. Even among the members themselves the desire for law-abiding methods would prevail if a noisy minority did not shout them out of their common sense and impel them to deeds that in sober moments they cannot help but afterwards regret.

MEMORIAL DAY.

The right to carry the Grand Army badge is a franchise of nobility grander than any ever created by the accolade of a king. It is a right not gained by birth, or wealth, or learning, by pencil of artist, or pen of author, or voice of orator, by suppliance to sovereign, or by the breath of popular applause.

No figures of human speech can estimate the debt that this nation owes to the men who wear the badge of the Grand Army about their beating hearts, or the flowers of remembrance upon the sod that covers their silent forms.

The breasts that proudly wear the Grand Army button are breasts that faced the iron hail of battle in behalf of the unity of the nation and the freedom of man, and whether the badge of patriotic service appears under the general's stars, or the colonel's eagles, or is worn by the poorest and most unlettered soldier who marched under the Union flag, the wearer is entitled to our gratitude and homage.

Look abroad upon the nation that the valor and sacrifice of these men preserved. What extent of boundaries, what wealth of sea and shore, of forest and mine, of field and orchard, of furnace ond forge, of mill and factory are ours. Four oceans wash our shores, and upon the loom of two hemispheres is spread the fabric of knitted empires which we call the United States of America.

Those whose graves will be strewn with flowers today have carried their record with them into the beyond. Only the Omniscient can comprehend all of each life. But it is for us to know so much of their lives as were given to a high and unselfish cause. In contemplation of their deeds we comprehend the meaning of the Evangelist's words that "a thousand years are as one day." In contemplation of their deeds:—

"The years are shrivelled like a scroll,
The past becomes the present."

And we behold them as they went forth in the May mornings four and fifty years ago. Bearded men, and young manhood with the down upon its cheeks moistened as with a chrism by the farewell tears of mothers, and sisters and wives. With helms high set, and faces lit with the lofty purpose that sanctifies war and makes of the battle thunders an anthem of angels they went marching along, "for God and for country they went marching along." Marching to suffer that the slave might be relieved from suffering. Marching to wounds that Freedom's fair form might be scathless of wounds. Marching to death that their country might live.

Not crowns of gold, nor diamonded gift, nor song, nor speech, can fitly express the honor that is due the Union dead. The art of man ends by their graves. All that strong arms and beautiful hands can do is to aid in the silent ministries of the flowers. Under the laurels and the lilies, under the roses and the green boughs and fragrant blossoms we leave the mortal parts of those whose immortal spirits have passed on to the reward which awaits those who died for mankind.

THE CITY ELECTION.

Not much interest is developing in the city election, except as to the fight over the Board of Education, which has become exceedingly bitter, the opponents of Superintendent Francis having resorted to reprehensible tactics and dragged in elements of discord which should never vex a community like this, where toleration and not bigotry should prevail. The little group of self-appointed municipal regulators who started this unpleasantness should be rebuffed at the polls and told in unmistakable terms to keep their hands off in the future. The miscalled "non-factional" or "non-partisan" or "Joescott" ticket for the School Board should be defeated at all costs.

As for the Mayoralty, there is little concern in the public mind. As a result of his triumphant vindication in court and of the indignation in the public mind over his persecution by Woolwine, Chief Sebastian probably will be elected. There is little doubt of it, although Mr. Whiffen has been gaining ground in the past week. The Earl support has weakened Sebastian; but he has too strong a lead to be defeated, we think, while granting that Mr. Whiffen's open and ringing denunciation of Earl's methods has made many new friends for him.

Los Angeles has a good City Council now, and the candidates in the lead give promise that a good Council will be elected next Tuesday. Men of experience and ability are safely picked as the winners in a majority of instances. On another page The Times canvasses the qualifications of the candidates for the benefit of its readers. It is a happy state of affairs that such desirable candidates are so certain to be elected.

The jitney-bus ordinance should certainly be defeated. All the great civic organizations are against it. Its success would mean an intolerable condition of danger to life and property on the streets, and the removal of all means of recourse from the public that owns and maintains the highways. The jitneys have their rights, and are useful, but must be regulated, like all other carriers. We cannot turn the city over to them and let them have their own way.

VOTE FOR THE GREEK THEATER.

The voters of Los Angeles will be called upon on Tuesday next to determine whether Los Angeles shall accept from Griffith J. Griffith the gift of an open-air Greek theater, and a hall of science and observatory, to be erected in the park which he donated to the city and which bears his name.

The cost of these improvements will exceed $100,000, which Col. Griffith has for more than a year been willing and ready to expend. The only conditions he attached to the gift were that charge of the construction and maintenance of the buildings, until they were completed and upon a self-sustaining basis, should be placed in the hands of three commissioners to be appointed by the Mayor.

The Council accepted the gift on these conditions, and Mayor Rose appointed W. C. Mushet, John T. Jones and Col. Griffith J. Griffith as commissioners.

The donor had previously employed architects and builders. He had visited the Greek theaters at Berkeley and other points, and the plans and drawings he had secured were approved by the other commissioners.

The site selected for the Greek theater is an ideal one. There is a steep high hill of a horse-shoe shape, from the foot of which there is a gentle slope to a flat. On the slope tiers of seats that will hold thousands of spectators are to be erected, and on the flat across the mouth of the horseshoe the vast stage will be built. The natural acoustic properties of the auditorium are so perfect that ordinary conversational tones on the flat can be heard up to the highest seat on the mountain, hundreds of feet away. The hall of science and the observatory are to be built on one side of the enclosure.

The plans for the Greek theater were completed, and the commissioners were about to take up their duties, when suddenly the members of the Park Commission applied to the Superior Court for an injunction to restrain Col. Griffith, his co-commissioners, the Mayor and the Common Council from proceeding with the building of the Greek theater, the hall of science and the observatory. The ground of the application was that the authority and rights of the Park Commission were being infringed.

It was the vanity of the Park Commissioners rather than their rights and authority that was invaded by the conditions of Col. Griffith's gift. It may not be denied that the Park Commissioners have made and are making a beautiful public resort of Griffith Park, but they should not assume that their skill as landscape gardeners endows them with ability to guide the construction of a Greek theater better than Col. Griffith, who has studied the art of such construction with the zeal of a scholar as well as the experience of a successful business man.

The Superior Court saw no merit in the application for an injunction to restrain the Mayor's commissioners from acting, and refused it, whereupon the Park Commission took an appeal to the Supreme Court where the matter rests "waiting the judgment day."

Suppose that while the matter is pending Col. Griffith should die. His unexecuted gift would not be a charge upon his estate. Suppose that he should grow weary of being harassed and bedevilled and should withdraw his gift. Would it console the people for the loss of their Greek theater to know that the "authority and rights" of the supersensitive members of the Park Commission had not been infringed.

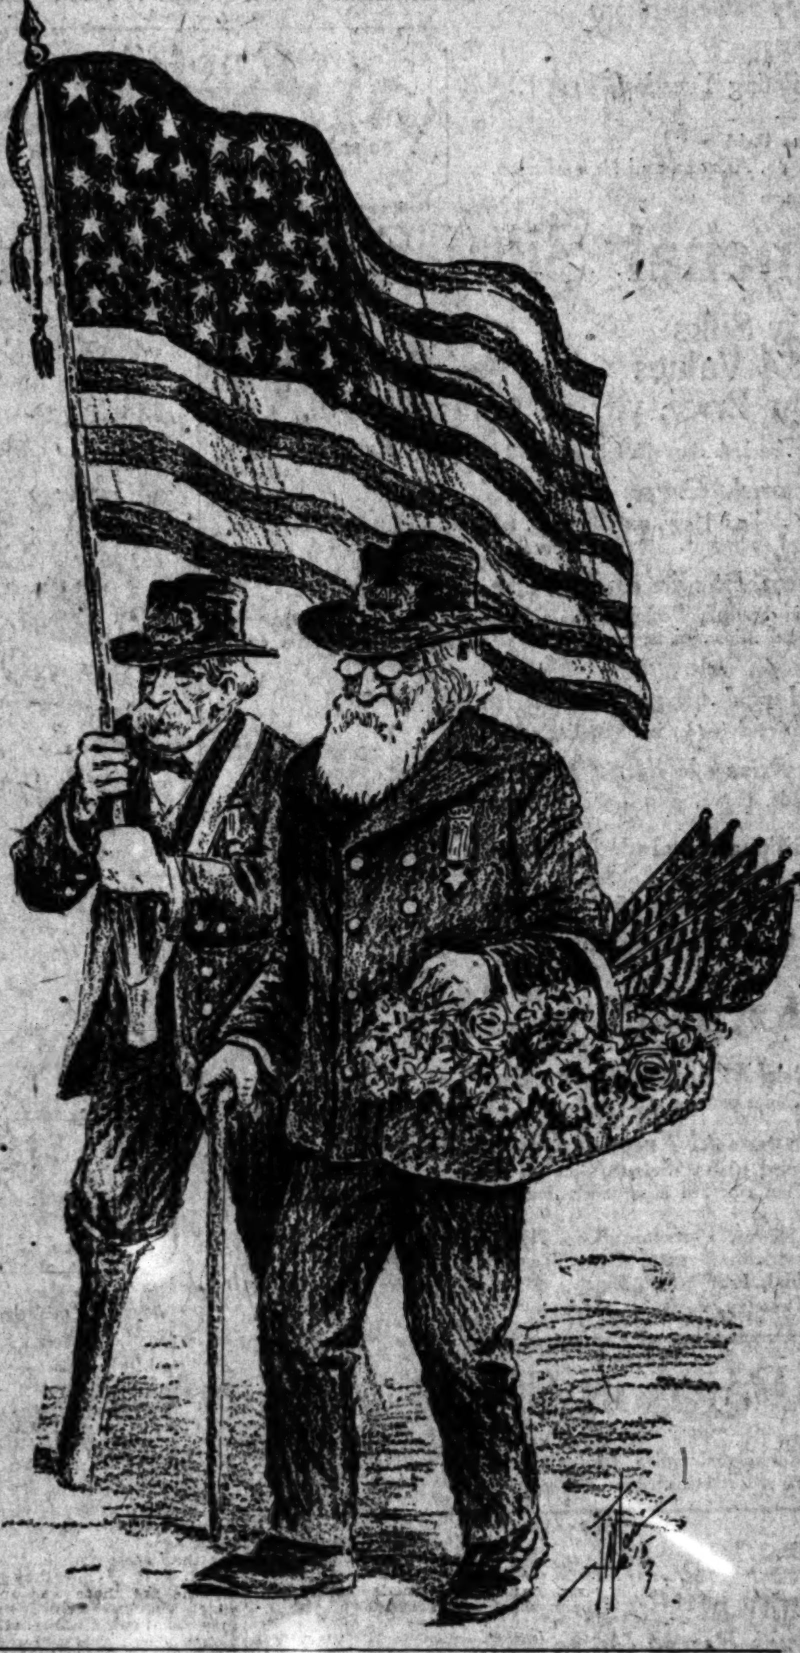
The people can protect their rights on Tuesday next by voting "Yes" on Proposition No. 3 which will appear upon the ballot as follows:

"Shall the action of the Council in accepting the gifts of Col. G. J. Griffith for the construction of the Greek theater, and an observatory and hall of science in Griffith Park, and its intention to conform to the conditions of said gift, be approved?"

AN EXCEPTION.

A man bought a second-hand cash register here the other day, and in overhauling it he disclosed two checks missing for a long time and thought to have been stolen. The brother of an American of prominence was once under a stigma of theft for thirty years before the lost package turned up in the patch of a mail pouch. Such things do happen occasionally, but usually when something disappears it does so through human agency.

The Day.



SIMPLY DEVILISH.

The "Interdenominational Free Tract Society" of Los Angeles should change its name and call itself the "Repudiator of Christ's Teachings Society." Pretending to be religious in its tendencies it has issued and circulated a tract headed: "Should a Saloon-keeper Marry—As His Business Will Soon Be an Outlaw?" And another tract headed: "What a Disgraceful Admission for His Children to Make! My Father Was a Saloon-keeper."

The Times, while it has opposed State prohibition, has yet been in favor of strict regulation almost approaching suppression of the sale of distilled liquors to be drunk on the premises where sold. But it would be less than loyal to the teachings of common decency if it failed to condemn the authors of the tracts whose captions we have quoted.

To state that a saloon-keeper ought not to enter into honorable marriage, but should indulge in the commission of statutory offenses, and that the innocent children of saloon-keepers should be treated as social pariahs, is such a cowardly and contemptible suggestion that one lacks words ugly enough to express one's disgust.

The intemperate temperance advocates who issued this tract are too cruel and too vile to associate with humane, clean, and fair-minded people. Living they belong in a leper camp, or a smallpox hospital, and dying they are too cruel and too mean to consort with reputable devils, and should ask Satan to roll out a barrel of sulphur for them and let them have a private hell of their own.

A BANK OF NORTH AMERICA.

[CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES]

BY ROGER W. BABSON,

President, the Babson Statistical Organization.

A "BANK OF NORTH AMERICA" should result from the Pan-American Conference on Finances which is to be held in Washington this month, and those who hope to do business with South America should actively aid in its establishment. It is by no means certain, however, that the manufacturers and exporters of the United States are ready to make the necessary efforts to secure the trade that awaits them in South America, owing to the many delusions under which they suffer.

The selling problem is simple. The questions of delivery and credits are much more complicated. Certainly no one should attempt to sell goods in South American countries until he understands the credit systems and methods now in vogue. However outlandish, unbusinesslike and unreasonable these conditions may seem to some of our manufacturers, they must be sympathetically understood and solved. Each concern can settle its own selling problems, but other questions such as credit, banking, shipping, and exchange must be solved by joint action.

South American customers must be financed by the manufacturers the same as are customers in North America. At present Europeans are financing their Latin-American customers by extending long-term credits. The North American way is different, but could be made as acceptable to our South American friends. When our manufacturers get together and establish banks in the leading South American centers, and loan money to their customers through the banks as they do in the United States, then they can receive payment for their bills in thirty days, as in the United States, and not before. Therefore, it is of the utmost importance to establish friendly banking institutions, which will not only loan money to finance purchases of our goods, but will also render us honest credit reports on individual firms.

With the questions of selling, credits and exchange settled, will anything else stand in our way? So long as Europe retains strong centralized governments she has a great advantage over us in foreign trade, and we can expect to progress only slowly. We who know the advantages of democracy are, of course, not willing to give up any of them in order to get foreign trade, but by associated action our exporters can perhaps make up for the handicap under which they are laboring. In spite of the fact that the United States has been accused of "dollar diplomacy," observation shows that the chief and foremost object of the navies, the consular and diplomatic services of both England and Germany is to put dollars into the pockets of their exporters. Of course, big corporations like the Standard Oil Company, the Singer Sewing Machine Company, the International Harvester Company, and the United States Steel Corporation can "go it alone," as they have already done in many foreign countries, but these are the exceptions.

Many people do not understand all the talk about the necessity of our buying South American goods in order to sell them our own goods. The reason why we must do this is because neither shipping nor banking and exchange institutions can be maintained unless there is a volume of trade both ways. South Americans can pay for our goods only with goods of their own—in other words, barter. They have no cash surplus unless we loan it to them directly, or else buy their securities. Again, unless we buy enough to furnish a return cargo we will have to pay higher ocean freight rates than those paid by German and English competitors. The individual manufacturer cannot, of course, buy goods which he does not use, but you can help your South American customers, or prospective customers, to dispose of their products in this country. Unfortunately South America has to sell only such goods as we also produce in large quantities. Hence, when New England sells her manufactured goods to South America, she must take corn, wheat, wool and beef in payment. This will be building up competition for our West which also raises the same products. As the West gradually comes to realize this it will not be enthusiastic over South American trade.

To establish a permanent and extensive trade with South America, we must not only swap goods, and—either directly or indirectly—extend credits, but our people must be prepared to buy the municipal, State, and Federal bonds of these South American countries as the Germans and English have done. If we buy these bonds we can stipulate that preference be given to materials made in our country, as European countries now do. The acquaintance that always springs up between those doing business together in a financial or business way will develop many possibilities now unseen.

There are wonderful opportunities in South America, but we cannot get them merely by holding our hats. Just as an investor cannot "take a flyer" in the stock market and make money, without a real knowledge of fundamental conditions, so a manufacturer cannot secure South American trade without a systematic study such as he would give to developing a new market in this country. Great opportunities exist for trade development with South America, but it cannot be "captured." Like everything else worth while, it can be secured and held only through careful and persevering work.

RIPPLING RHYMES.

INDOORS.

"Oh, I hate to work," said the weary clerk, "in this stale and stuffy store, when the birdlets sing 'Dumpty-ting-a-ling,' in that tree outside the door; when the skies are fair, and the balmy air is scented with lilac bloom, it is fierce, I say, that a man must stay all day in a musty room!" Then he takes a day from work, in May, and rambles the glades and dells; oh, he haunts the streams that he saw in dreams—for a time he is wearing bells. When his jaunt is o'er he returns once more to the place where he earns his mon, where he lately squealed—and his nose is peeled, for it couldn't stand the sun; and his legs are sore where the chiggers tore their way through the juicy meat, and he raves and rants of the blooming ants that thought he was good to eat; and he weeps and squirms as he tells of worms that dined on his shapely calves, and he prates of bugs as he goes for drugs, for liniments, balms and salves. And he says, says he, "It's the store for me, here comfort for aye abides; no more I'll hie where the hornets fly, dad blister their blink blank hides!" WALT MASON.

vacation camp movement started by the city in 1911, on a small scale, has been a subject for comment and investigation on the part of playgrounds and civic betterment associations from a dozen States and a score of cities and this feature of the work of the local playgrounds department is destined to be followed generally.

The first camp was established at Corona del Mar, where, with an equipment of ten tents, 100 boys were afforded a real vacation by the sea. Admittedly an experiment at the start, its success was demonstrated the first week and plans for making the summer vacation camp a permanent part of the work of the department were taken up at once. San Gabriel Canyon was the location chosen for the next two years and at this camp, tents were used. Then the little canvas city was moved to an ideal spot in the mountains, on government land, fifteen miles from San Bernardino.

Government officials in charge of the reservation co-operated in every way with the playgrounds department of the city and through their efforts the city obtained a lease of the ground so that it was practical to erect a permanent camp. When all is in readiness for this year's outing the city will have an investment of approximately $3500 and it will include, besides the twenty tent houses of good lumber, with side panels of canvas, a culinary outfit, swimming pool, lawns and water system, with sanitary arrangements throughout. Water is piped 1000 feet from a mountain spring above the camp, while the big open-air plunge is supplied from the brook which flows through the camp.

The houses now nearing completion on the site where tents were pitched last year are arranged in terraces and around the dining and kitchen quarters the ground has been seeded to grass for a distance of 250 feet.

EXPERTS IN CHARGE.

One of the best-trained playground supervisors on the city staff will be in charge of the boys and girls, and he will be assisted by six other employees of the playgrounds department and a number of volunteer workers. "School" and "study" are two terms that are taboo at the vacation camp, but the recreation will be directed along nature study and arts and crafts lines and, in consideration of the charge of $7.50 for two weeks, including transportation and meals, each boy and girl will be required to do an hour's work each day around the camp.

Reservations are being made at the old Normal School Building for the first group of boys, which will leave June 28 and return July 12. Boys in this party will range from 12 to 14 years of age. The second group of boys leaves July 12 and returns July 26 and these will be 15 years and over. Fathers and older brothers will be allowed to accompany the second group.

The first group of girls, under 14, leaves July 26 and returns August 23, and the second group of girls, with their mothers, if they wish, leaves August 9 and returns August 23.

The Nerve of it All.

INDIGNANT DO THEY BECOME.

"LARRY" AND DANFORD APPEAR SOMEWHAT PEEVED.

Postponement of Preliminary Examination in Lottery Cases Leads to Their Becoming "Het" Up. Sullivan "Knows" More About Law than His Attorney.

Two of the defendants in the lottery case pending in the United States District Court, Lawrence M. Sullivan, better known as "Larry," and William J. Danford, the disbarred attorney and paroled convict, became quite indignant yesterday when they called at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court and were informed by United States Commissioner Williams that the preliminary hearing has been postponed until next Saturday.

Before their arrival the other defendants in the case—W. H. H. Young, J. P. Buckley, W. L. Pettit, Edward Lower, Pearl N. Fawcett and Arthur D. Daniels—had consented to the postponement without a word of criticism, but Danford and Sullivan were all "het" up.

Danford, executing one of his justly celebrated San Quentin poses, pounded the desk in the clerk's office with his fist, and shouted something about a "frame-up," while Sullivan politely informed his attorney, Fred H. Moore, who stood at a respectful distance with an armful of law books under his arm, that he (Sullivan) had more stuff in his head than Moore had in the books.

It was evident that both Danford and Sullivan expected a postponement of the hearing, for they presented affidavits in support of their motion for an immediate trial, and Attorney Moore also had a similar instrument alleging that his clients had not been fully advised of their rights at the time they were arraigned before the commissioner.

Copies of the affidavits were served upon United States Commissioner Williams and Asst. Dist.-Atty. Moody, and Commissioner Williams set next Tuesday morning, when the question of an immediate hearing would be convene Wednesday for the accom-

The application of the defendants, Danford and Sullivan, for an immediate hearing will hardly avail them anything. The grand jury will reconvene Wedsnesday for the accommodation of the defendants in the lottery case, and it is expected that a report will be made to the Federal Court that afternoon. In that case the request for "an immediate" hearing will not amount to much, for the report will be made before the inquiry could possibly be concluded by the United States Commissioner.

It is intended to expedite the matter as much as possible, and the investigation has progressed to the point when a report can quickly be made. It is understood both Sullivan and Danford intended, if the hearing had taken place yesterday, to furnish a number of sensational statements as to the part some members of the city police force played in the roundup of the lottery defendants, with a view to the possible effect certain disclosures if made might have upon the election Tuesday.

But there will be no hearing before the commissioner. When the grand jury makes its report before the date now set for the inquiry, the next thing will be for the defendants to appear in court and plead to the indictment returned against them. And the men indicted will be placed on the defensive by the testimony of perhaps every one of the defendants themselves, with the exception of Sullivan and Danford.

Explosion in Rubbish Fire Sends Them to the Hospital—Wounds not Serious.

Three men were painfully injured and removed to the Receiving Hospital yesterday morning as the result of an explosion which took place while they were burning rubbish in the back yard of their home, No. 723 Yale street. They were cut about their faces and hands, all bleeding profusely but none seriously wounded.

The victims are Joseph Gagliardi, Angelo Gagliardi and C. Garson. They had cleaned the yard and after throwing the refuse into a pile touched a match to it. While they were watching the fire there was an explosion which knocked them down and when they recovered their equilibrium all looked like they had been slashed with a knife. What exploded is a mystery but it is believed to have been a bottle containing gasoline.

GREETER AFTER HIGHER OFFICE.

LOCAL HOTEL MAN PRAISES CALIFORNIA IN HIS ANNOUNCEMENT.

John Y. Bedell, president of the Greeters' Club and assistant manager of the Hayward, has made a formal announcement of his candidacy for vice-president of the Greeters' national organization, which holds its annual convention in Atlanta June 7-9. An artistic announcement of Mr. Bedell's ambition, decorated with California poppies, which has been sent to the leading hotel men of the country, calls attention to the charms of the State and the merits of the two expositions.

Incidental to Mr. Bedell's modest reference to himself he gives this sensible advice in his printed announcements: "Don't fail to stop off in Los Angeles on your way to or from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, and the Panama-California Exposition, San Diego."

The official delegates from Los Angeles to the convention are Mr. Bedell and Thomas R. Jackson of the Lankershim, who is secretary of the local club. It was largely through Mr. Bedell's efforts that the Greeters' national convention was brought to Los Angeles last June. He was one of the delegates from Los Angeles to the previous convention held in St. Paul.

PHONE RATE FIXING DELAY.

COUNCIL ALSO HOLDS UP GAS UNTIL AFTER ELECTION.

President Whiffen Flip-flops Again on Hawthorne Water Rate Question, but has Lot of Company this Time, Including Majority of His Colleagues in Council.

Metered or measured service telephone rates were tentatively turned down by the City Council yesterday when it granted the protests filed against the change in rates for business telephone service and set a rehearing on the rates for next Wednesday. Hearing of the protests against the new gas rates proposed by the Board of Public Utilities was also continued until after election, and hearing of the protestants against the assessment for opening Broadway from Tenth to Pico streets was set for June 7, and the following day was also left open for continuation of this hearing.

President Whiffen flip-flopped again on the question of rates for the Hawthorne Water Company. He announced his flop from the chair, adding that this time all the rest of the Council was flopping with him, so he believed he was in good company. This water rate, which was threshed out the day before, was a proposal to reduce the charge for water used for other than irrigation purposes from $1.40, as recommended, to $1.20 for 800 cubic feet. This was supported originally by Messrs. Bryant and Roberts, but in the vote yesterday there was no opposition. President Lane of the Utilities Board said that he believes that the lower rate can be sustained in court on the ground that the $1.40 rate should apply for 100 per cent. efficient service and that the overhead allowance for the Hawthorne company is too high.

Protests against the metered service telephone rates proposed by the Utilities Board were read from individual subscribers and from the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, maintaining that the only telephone users who would come in under the minimum business rate would be new subscribers, and that the effect of the new rates would be to raise the cost of telephone service to present users from 5 to 500 per cent. The protests were granted and a rehearing on the telephone rates will be given Wednesday at 2 p.m. The indications are that the Council will then refuse to approve the metered service rate.

The chief objection to the proposed gas rates at 62½ cents for better quality gas and 57 cents for gas of present quality was to the minimum charge of 50 cents a month. Councilmen Wheeler and Snowden classed this as a method of charging for goods not delivered, and while Councilmen Conwell and Betkouski wanted to approve the Utilities Board rates, the Council finally decided to continue consideration of protests until Wednesday.

The Rindge Company protest against the assessment for opening Broadway was read along with the company's arraignment of the Council and its members as "totally prejudiced and unfit to hear the protest" and hearing was set for June 7 at 2 p.m. Practically all of the Broadway protestants were represented in person yesterday.

GOTHAM'S GREETINGS. NEW YORK OFFICIAL CALLS.

Official greetings from the Borough of Brooklyn were brought to Los Angeles yesterday by Lewis H. Pounds, borough president, who attended the meeting of the City Council.

"Most of our people have never been farther West than Buffalo, and I believe I am the only man officially connected with the government of the City of New York who has had western experience," said President Pounds. "This is my first visit here in eighteen years and I am frank to confess that I would not recognize it as the same city. Our party has been in every large city on the Pacific Coast and to us, Los Angeles is the city that has made an impression as being a real, live city in good condition right now."

President Pounds, who is a guest of his nephew, Fielding J. Stilson, while in Los Angeles, will go to San Diego tomorrow.

COMPLIMENTS POLICE. EXPERT LOOKS OVER FORCE.

Raymond B. Fosdick of New York, police administration expert and author of a book on police administration in European cities, began an investigation of conditions in Los Angeles yesterday. His first impression of the local police force was that the personnel of the men in the ranks was much better than the average in American cities.

"Anyone familiar with police conditions generally throughout the United States could almost tell at a glance that politics has little to do with the appointment of men to the Los Angeles police force," said Mr. Fosdick. "They are a fine lot of men and would compare favorably with the police of any city in the country."

ACQUITTED OF SEDUCTION.

A jury in Judge Trippet's court yesterday acquitted William Lloyd of the charge of having seduced Hester Frazer, a ward of the Juvenile Court of San Diego county, while aboard the steamer Governor en route from San Francisco to San Diego, in September last. The acknowledged unchastity of the girl secured the acquittal of Lloyd.

INJURED IN COACH.

Falling in the aisle of a Santa Fe passenger coach while en route from New Albany, Ind., to Napa, this State, to visit her daughter, Mrs. Eliza Hayney, 70 years old, sustained a dislocated shoulder and upon arrival here yesterday morning was taken to the County Hospital. Mrs. Hayney said the same shoulder was thrown out of place ten years ago.

Great Authorized Debt and Fat Dividends There.

Trial of Company's Former Heads Takes Shape.

Reading from the records of the company, the government yesterday took the first actual steps toward the prosecution of Charles A. Elder and his ten associates, charged with using the United States mails to defraud in connection with the business of the Los Angeles Investment Company, while they were its officers and directors.

Salient facts established by the minutes of the meetings of the board of directors during the period from June 11, 1911, to November 7, 1913, are:

That the company authorized a total indebtedness of $9,500,000; that the capital stock was increased from $2,500,000 to $5,000,000; that quarterly dividends at the rate of 28 per cent. per annum were regularly declared; that the Los Angeles Investment Company purchased 3,230,000 shares of the stock of the Home Makers' Company for $387,600 cash and agreed to guarantee the stock to purchasers; that the salary of Charles A. Elder was raised from $250 per month to $1200 per month and the salaries of the other officials in a less proportion; that at the meeting of June 10, 1913, the president and secretary reported they had purchased 200,041 shares of the investment company stock for the guarantee fund at $3.70 per share, one-third being paid in cash and the balance in a note signed by Elder and Derby.

The indebtedness authorized consisted of $8,000,000 in gold notes, $500,000 in Home certificates and $1,000,000 to be borrowed on the building at Eighth street and Broadway. It was stated these sums were to be used for paying operating expenses, purchasing real estate and for improvements on property. What portion of the authorized indebtedness was actually contracted has not as yet been shown.

ABOUT DIVIDENDS.

From numerous minutes of the meetings of the board of directors the prosecution read of quarterly dividends to be paid at the rate of 28 per cent. per annum and, on one occasion, of an additional dividend of 1 per cent. At the stockholders' meeting, it was shown, while a majority voted to fix the rate at 28 per cent., votes were cast for a rate as high as 200 per cent. At a meeting of the board of directors held August 8, 1911, a resolution was passed calling a special meeting of stockholders to consider the question of increasing the capital stock from $2,500,000 to $5,000,000.

November 14, 1911, a resolution was passed by the board of directors authorizing the president and secretary to sell any unissued stock at $3.70 per share, "to carry on the business of the company." The resolution also provided that the president and secretary might raise the price of the stock or withdraw it from sale.

Elder's salary was fixed at a meeting June 12, 1911, at $250 per month. At a meeting February 13, 1912, the president's salary was increased to $1000 per month, while the secretary was given $400 per month, the treasurer $300 per month, the auditor $200 per month and the counsel $600 per annum. The following year, January 14, 1913, the president's salary was increased to $1200 per month, the secretary to $500 per month, treasurer $375 per month, auditor $225 per month and counsel $1000 per annum.

ISSUANCE OF NOTES.

The first issue of gold notes to the amount of $1,000,000 was authorized at a meeting held February 14, 1911, and the purpose was stated to be to improve the holdings of the company and other purposes as the directors shall approve. The form of the notes was specified in the resolution. The rate of interest was to be 6 per cent. per annum, to be compounded semi-annually if unpaid, and the time could be extended by written notice in case of financial panics or other disturbances, in which case the rate of interest should be doubled. An additional issue of $1,000,000 was authorized March 14, 1911, and another $1,000,000 March 12, 1912.

The purchase of the Baldwin tract of 3100 acres for $2000 per acre by the president and secretary was authorized at the meeting held June 11, 1912, and July 9, 1912, the president or vice-president and secretary or treasurer were authorized to issue $500,000 in home certificates, payments to be received on the purchase price of property bought from the company, or rents due.

The president and secretary were authorized to borrow up to $5,000,000 and issue gold notes for that amount at a meeting held May 7, 1913. At this meeting a communication was read from a syndicate, of which Elder and his associates were members, offering to buy all the unissued stock of the company for $4.35 per share, the Los Angeles Investment Company to become trustee of the stock. This offer was accepted by a resolution. It was at the meeting held June 10, 1913, that the president and secretary reported the sale of the 200,041 shares of stock to the guarantee fund at $4.30 per share, one-third of the purchase price being paid in cash and the balance secured by a note signed by Elder and Derby.

It was at this meeting that the purchase of the 3,230,000 shares of Home Makers' stock was authorized to be purchased for $387,600 cash, provided the Home Makers increased its capital stock to 5,000,000 shares. At a meeting held July 8, 1913, it was reported the Los Angeles Investment Company had purchased from the Home Makers' Company certain property for $12,500, to be paid in space in the Home, the monthly magazine of the investment company.

The proposition to borrow $1,000,000 on the building at Broadway and Eighth street was approved at a meeting held September 24, 1913.

STORM MUTTERS.

The first rumble of the coming storm, which was to blow the old management from power, was given in the records of the meeting of October 29, 1913, when it was voted to pass the payment of the regular dividend. A lengthy resolution was adopted setting forth the general financial stringency as the cause. At a meeting held the following day a letter was read from Charles Cassatt Davis, one of the directors and one of the defendants in the present trial.

Mr. Davis said in his letter that the statements made in the circular letter announcing the passing of the dividend were so misleading that he felt compelled to protest. He said the impression was given that the company could, if it saw fit, pay the dividend, while such was not the fact. He said he had first learned the Los Angeles Investment Company had advanced money to the guarantee fund while negotiating for the sale of the Globe Savings Bank, but had been told by Mr. Derby that no money was at that time advanced to the fund. He declared he feared the issuance of the circular letter would cause trouble. He also protested against the issuance of unsecured obligations when the company was already financially embarrassed. He closed by stating he would withdraw from the board unless certain actions were taken to change the policy of the company in these matters.

The chronicle ended with the reading of the minutes of the meeting of November 7, 1913, when the offer of the Elder directors to retire and the request that the men, who afterward assumed the management, should take control, was read, together with the acceptance of the new management, under certain specified conditions, and the acceptance of these conditions. This was officially ratified by the Elder board.

Miss Ercell May Hunter, the stenographer who worked under Deeble, remained on the stand throughout the day and will resume her testimony Tuesday. She was used by the government to identify the records of the minutes of the various meetings.

The attorneys for the defendants consumed comparatively but little of the court's time yesterday in technical objections, exhibiting thereby a complete reversal of their previous tactics. In consequence marked progress was made, but even the most sanguine will not attempt to predict when the trial will end.

So far the defense has given not the slightest indication of what line it will adopt and the attorneys unanimously refuse to talk on the subject.

The trial will be resumed Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

Court had hardly convened yesterday when a frail little woman, bearing in her arms a lusty, handsome boy perhaps a year old, appeared in the corridors of the Federal Building, and expressed a desire to see Judge Bledsoe. She was told the judge could not be seen, and went away weeping, while the baby smiled and crowed in great, good humor.

The woman is Mrs. Andrew Booth, a taxidermist, with a little shop at No. 235 East Fourth street, and living at No. 1017 West Avenue Forty-nine. Her husband is a juror in the Los Angeles Investment trial. She said she had been compelled to shut up their place of business as she could not attend to it and look after the baby. She wanted to know if there were not some way to get the husband free of jury duty. "We will be ruined if he does not come home and look after his business," she said.

But she was told there is no possible way of getting him out of the case.

"That's the way it goes," she remarked. "The woman always gets the worst of it. I could put somebody in the store, but he would steal everything in sight. I cannot attend to the business and look after this boy, and you can bet he will be cared for if nothing else is done."

"STARS OF TODAY."

A society minstrel show will be given in Choral Hall, Temple Auditorium, Thursday evening, under the auspices of St. Athanasius Church. The programme will contain selections from many theatrical operatic stars, such as Olga Nethersole, Ysaye, Lillian Russell, etc., local talent appropriating their names for the occasion.

"In HOMES We Trust"

"HOME"

And we have "trusted" enough people in times of financial depression and, through our expert knowledge of materials and construction, enabled them to realize their dream of a HOME, to have really earned the name of

Professional Lumber Merchants

Conservation is deservedly the order of the day. To save money, time, trouble; to secure the most satisfactory result with the least effort and the least expense; to insure against disappointment; to know that no possible chance of either commission or omission has been overlooked; this is the ideal of every Home Builder—an ideal we have attained by the aid of the industrial services provided for us as members of the Western Retail Lumbermen's Association.

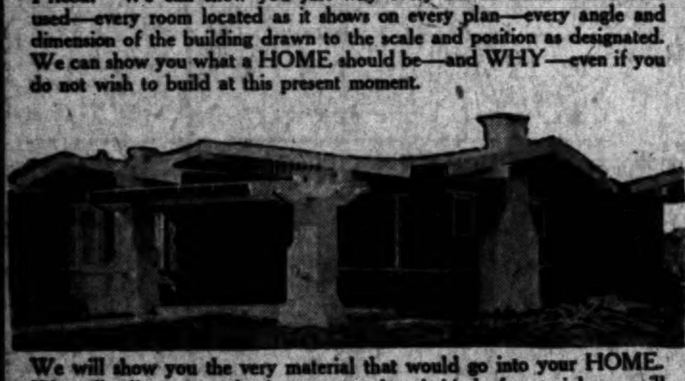
How We Have Americanized That Supreme Business—The Building of a Home

Until now, the building of a Home has been a matter of such magnitude that it was undertaken only after long and serious consideration. There were so many people to "see"—so many things to discuss—so many conflicting interests to harmonize—that the wonder is that people built as much as they did.

But today, people have learned that HOME BUILDING can be just as easy as they want to make it. Today, the retail building material merchant (you formerly knew of him vaguely as "running a lumber yard") is fully equipped to take care of every phase of your building troubles. What used to be a matter of months of worry, is now a matter of a few hours' pleasant discussion. Every possible question has been anticipated and the right answer worked out by experts.

With the aid of our Associational Experts, men of a standing in their profession recognized in thirty states, and whose assistance we secure only through our membership in our Association, we can meet every situation. We are equipped to start with the lot and suggest the proper sort of a building for that location. We go through every detail of the construction, and are not only able to meet your wishes in the best manner but to make advantageous suggestions where you are in doubt.

We can show you a hundred designs of the Prize Plans of the day; houses that are Modern, Convenient, Artistic, Step-Saving and Moderate Priced. We can show you just why every bit of material has been used—every room located as it shows on every plan—every angle and dimension of the building drawn to the scale and position as designated. We can show you what a HOME should be—and WHY—even if you do not wish to build at this present moment.



We will show you the very material that would go into your HOME. We will tell you exactly the amount of each kind of material you will need. We will tell you just what your HOME will cost you, and it will be much less than the appearance would indicate.

In a word, we depend not only on our own experience but we have called to our aid, FOR YOUR BENEFIT AS OUR CUSTOMERS, the services of the best construction experts that can be obtained. Individually we could not give you this service, but by combining our contributions—in other words, our membership fees to our Association—we can, with the aggregate sum thus obtained hire these men to work for YOUR BENEFIT.

It is our business—modern business—and we believe that our efforts to DELIVER THE GOODS merit at least an investigation of our claim to HELP YOU BUILD A HOME, QUICKLY, EASILY, INEXPENSIVELY, and best of all, SATISFACTORILY.

There are some thirteen hundred of us in the Pacific Coast States. A full list will be sent to any interested person on request to the Home Office. We, whose names are lisited below, are in the Southern California territory, and are prepared to give you a service that is complete in every detail. We shall be glad to have you call if only to get acquainted and to see what we can do for you.

WOMEN'S WORK AND WOMEN'S CLUBS

BY DOROTHY B. JOHNSTON.

A DECIDED acquisition to Los Angeles art circles and especially to women who are really "doing things" is Miss Florence McComb of New York, an interior decorator of superior reputation, who is a graduate of the New York School of Fine and Applied Arts, in addition to having mastered a thorough course in architecture. The advantage of European teachers and travel has been hers.

In selecting Los Angeles for a center in which to do her work, Miss McComb first passed some time in Vancouver, Victoria, Seattle and Portland, but recognized that only in the Southland could she find the climatic and beautiful surroundings to give necessary expression to her art—which lend themselves for a perfect setting for a home.

This great work, which of necessity lies closest to all mankind—the home—finds in Miss McComb a real artist who studies each detail.

That this gifted, earnest young woman will be joyfully received in Los Angeles goes without saying.

The former graduated from the New York School of Fine and Applied Arts, and is an interior decorator of note. She has come to Los Angeles to join the colony of artists. Mrs. Enderly is an artist who will participate in Mrs. G. E. Morrell's recital-tea on Thursday.

Convention Aftermath.

The fourteenth annual convention of the California Federation of Women's Clubs is over, but the aftermath lives on, as will be recognized from the following letter sent to The Times.

One thing was accomplished by the Special Committee on Revision of the Constitution and By-laws—they found out to a person just who is holding political appointments throughout the State, and especially in the Los Angeles district.

Women who went north to "fight to the death" came away disheartened and "sick unto death" over what they saw in the undercurrent.

Feeling is evidently very strong with the club women who were lined up on either side of the much-discussed differences. But really, now that it is all over, but one way remains open—forget the unpleasantness and work together for constructiveness. Above all, stop the calumny being heaped upon leaders, and learn to be unselfish. The world needs all kinds of women.

The letter attached is used solely to correct a wrong impression that has gone forth:

[To the Editor of The Times:] In a report of the affairs of the State Federation convention, I have before me a statement from Dorothy Willis, printed in the Tribune, saying "even the third member of the Revision Committee, Mrs. B. F. Walton, stands strongly upon her statements made yesterday that she did not know what was in the revision, and does not now believe in many of the changes." Will you kindly print the following copy of a letter received from Mrs. Walton dated February 10, 1915, referring to the final report, portions having been previously mailed as fast as completed, including the suggestions sent by her? "No. 2209 Second avenue, West Curtis Oaks,

"Sacramento, Feb. 10, 1915.

"My dear Mrs. Hartwell: I am returning the copy of revision sent me some time ago. I have submitted it to a committee of this district, and in the main it seems satisfactory. As it will all have to be threshed over at convention, I do not deem it necessary to incorporate any of the suggestions or comments save the one you will note under Article II, making the time of sending resolutions thirty instead of sixty days.

"Sincerely hoping that you have fully recovered ere this, I remain,

"Faithfully yours,

"Mrs. B. F. Walton."

MRS. CALVIN HARTWELL,
Chairman Revision Committee.

To Discuss Important Business.

A business meeting will be held June 3 at the Progressive Household Club. Members are requested to be present to elect officers and attend to important business matters.

Wednesday Morning Graduation.

On June 2 at 2 p.m. the Wednesday Morning Club will have their closing event—with graduation exercises, yearly reports and installation of officers. The French section entertained at the clubhouse on Wednesday afternoon with a historical play, consisting of two acts, written especially for them by their French teacher, Madam de Courlon. The time of the play was during the reign of Louis XI. Those taking part were: Miss Annie Yost, Miss May Britton, Mrs. A. B. Glass, Miss Pierce, Mrs. Garrey, Mrs. Tilley, Isabel Mushet, Mrs. Liversidge and Madam de Courlon.

The part of the programme deserving special mention was the music. The first number, "En Route," by Godard, was rendered by Prof. Jean de Chauvenet. The next number "Villanelle" (Dell'Acqua,) sung by Madam de Chauvenet, was a poem in song telling of the swiftness or the swallows darting through the land of Apollo, full of sunshine and jasmine. The English title being "Oft have I seen the swift swallow."

Oscar Werner rendered some delightful selections on the violin, accompanied by his wife at the piano. Among them was theme, variations and finale from "Fantasia Caprice," by Henri Vieuxtemps.

Some fancy dancing by Lucile McDonald closed the programme. Members and friends adjourned to the parlors for tea, Mmes. Mushet, Knapp, Savory and Thomas presiding at the tables.

HAIR SUNBURNS AS MUCH AS THE SKIN.

Remember that to dry the hair in the sun is disastrous, for the hair when wet will fade and change color just as the skin becomes tanned or burned. Sunshine and fresh air are both fine hair tonics, but not hot sunshine on wet or damp hair. Not until you have thoroughly dried your tresses after a shampoo are you ready to give them their sunbath. And, too, it is imperative that you be very careful in choosing your cleansing preparation, and never use cleansers made for all purposes, but instead get some good mixture made expressly for shampooing the hair and stimulating its growth. You can enjoy the best that is known by getting a package of Canthrox from your druggist; dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water and your shampoo is ready. After its use the hair dries rapidly with uniform color. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its luster and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth.

To Study the Exposition.

On Thursday evening the Rex Arms Delphian Club met for arrangements preliminary to regular semimonthly meetings. It was decided to take up the study of expositions and Mrs. C. M. Bacon, club leader for Los Angeles, gave a brief talk on the industrial and cultural value of international fairs. Among the charter members of this club are Mrs. M. E. Bittinger, Mrs. H. I. Doud, Mrs. C. C. Loomis, Mrs. E. C. Layton, Mrs. R. S. Oakley, Mrs. Robert Powell, Mrs. B. S. Galloway, Mrs. G. P. Potter, Mrs. Flora Snodgrass, Mrs. Josephine A. Hebbard, Mrs. Fayette C. Lamb, Mrs. Alice N. Fuller, Mrs. Rose M. Gleason, Mrs. W. S. Matlock, Mrs. B. E. Taney, Mrs. Isabel Vignolo, Dr. Marie Thorsen, Mrs. D. M. Brown, Mrs. Charles L. Poole, Mrs. Jones-Simmons, Mrs. Fred Golding, Miss Leonore von der Lieth.

It was agreed to hold regular sessions the first and third Tuesday mornings at 10:30, while an evening circle will accommodate those unable to conform to the morning period. The meetings will be held at the Rex Arms apartments.

The Friday Evening Delphian Club was organized this week at Blanchard Hall. Its membership is composed of business and professional women. The next meeting will be held on Friday, June 4, and a good attendance is desired.

The Delphian Society, which is conducting a national campaign in the interest of higher education and social progress, has recently opened its charter for Southern California. During the last few months many Delphian clubs have been formed in San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Salt Lake City, as well as in interior and eastern cities. Several sections are in process of organization in Los Angeles and will presently convene for regular work.

Tropico Club.

The programme furnished by Mrs. Harry E. Bowman, chairman of the Programme Committee of the Tropico Thursday Afternoon Club, at the home of Mrs. Clyde R. Carmack on North Central avenue, Thursday afternoon, was very interesting, as Arthur W. Kinney, industrial commissioner of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, gave an instructive talk on "Home Industry and Home Prosperity." preceding this programme an interesting business meeting, at which Mrs. Charles A. Barker presided, was held. Mrs. Carmack presided at the tea table, assisted by Mrs. Andrew Stephenson, Mrs. D. O. Martin, Mrs. Ella W. Richardson and Miss Cora Hickman.

Mrs. Alexander J. Frankland of Boynton street, who recently returned from a visit to San Francisco, visited the Cerritos school and talked to the pupils of the eighth grade on the beautiful colorings and especially the Tower of Jewels at the exposition.

Mrs. Frankland talked relative to her visit to the Pacific exposition.

Escondido.

The Escondido Woman's Club, the leading club of its kind in the valley, having a membership of about forty, closed a very successful season's work with the meeting of Wednesday, at the home of the president, Mrs. A. W. Wohlford. The attendance was large. The principal paper of the afternoon was that of Mrs. M. A. Frost on "Children's Books," which on account of the absence of Mrs. Frost in the East was read by Mrs. P. J. Wisdom of Richland. The programme included vocal solos by Mrs. H. W. Beers, Arthur E. Ruff and Miss Charlotta Schrupp. Besides this entertainment a delightful little play, known as "Kleptomaniac," was given by seven of the young women students of the High School, as follows: Mae Wooseley, Mae Urshel, Frances Marsh, Roberta Bowler, Grace Carpenter, Gladys Foote and Alma Hunter. Refreshments were served. The club will not meet again until October, when the opening meeting of the season of 1915-16 will be held.

Alhambra Wednesday Afternoon Club.

The final meetting of the club season was held on the afternoon of May 26, with the largest attendance during the year. Under the capable management of the outgoing board of directors the annual luncheon was given. The clubhouse was beautiful in its appointments of yellow and white.

Following luncheon Mrs. Harry E. Rose, the president, announced the programme, which was also one of rare worth. Later she introduced the club's new president, Mrs. J. N. Gillies, and the new officers. After a brief outline of what she hoped to do during the ensuing year by the new president, who was warmly greeted, the meeting adjourned until the first Wednesday in October.

Ebell will not Meet Tomorrow.

On account of the Memorial Day observance Ebell Club will hold no session tomorrow, but on June 7 the annual business meeting will occupy the time. Officers are to report and a reception for new members extended. It is also election day.

The Shakespeare section, so ably supervised the past year by Miss M. E. Elliott, the curator, and Mrs. Edward North, instructor, held a delightful luncheon yesterday to close their season. It was a large affair, and served at 12:30 o'clock, with the programme at 2 p.m. Mrs. C. S. Hall, Mrs. George Burket Logan and Mrs. Edmund E. Smith contributed readings from "King Lear" and "Richard III," and Shakespeare songs and lay sermons were an important feature.

By far the most pretentious comedy yet attempted by the members of the French section of Ebell, "Le Medcin Malgre Lui" (a physician in spite of himself,) by Moliere, was very successfully rendered by them on Friday afternoon before a large and appreciative audience. Much time and study had been devoted to the play by those taking part and no effort was spared to make this closing play of the club term a success. The members were assisted by Mrs. J. W. Hendrick.

Following are those who took part: Reading of synopsis, Miss Mattie Wilson; Geronte (father of Lucinde,) Amy Wheeler; Lucinde (daughter of Geronte,) Helen Switzer; Leandre (Lucinde's lover,) Mrs. G. B. Macaulay; Sganarelle (wood-chopper and a physician despite himself,) Mrs. J. P. Fischer; Martine (wife of Sganarelle,) Mrs. J. W. Hendrick; M. Robert (a neighbor,) Mrs. R. C. Barrett; Valere (head servant of Geronte,) Florence Reiley; Lucas (servant of Geronte,) Mrs. J. A. Walls; Jacqueline (nurse,) Elizabeth Wheeler.

This play brought to a close a very successful study term of the department of French expression under the curatorship of Mrs. Charles Clark and Mme. Isabelle de Kerpezdron, instructor.

Throughout June the club is to have exceptional programmes, with three members furnishing June 14's afternoon. Mrs. Alfred Whitney Allen is to read Louis Parker's "The Minute;" Mrs. Fred Selwyn Lang, accompanied by Mrs. W. H. Jamison, pianoforte, will give Cecil Fanning's "Pipes of Pan" (the musical score from Lulu Jones Downing,) and Mrs. Charles C. Hall is to read Margaret Douglas Rogers's "The Gift."

Mrs. Marguerite Buckler Stevenson of Paris is to be heard for her initial appearance in the city on Ebell's programme of June 21. An exhibit of miniatures by California artists and a loan exhibit of old and new miniatures, also fine old daguerreotypes and ambrotypes are to be displayed. Officers and directors are to be installed at this meeting.

An innovation has been introduced for the final meeting—a Fete Champetre at Verdugo Park when, under the direction of Miss Willimena Wilkes, the Civic Repertoire Company will present "The Arrow Maker." In addition there will be music for dancing. Tickets, including admission to the grounds and lunch, may be obtained by members at Ebell Club office, guest tickets also being procurable at the same rate.

June 30, from 4 to 6 o'clock, the club will entertain with a reception in honor of officers and delegates to the convention of the National Federation of Musical Clubs.

The Browning study section will meet for the last time June 2, when Mrs. G. G. Detzer will discuss "James Lee's Wife" and Mrs. Carrie Stone Freeman will give Browning songs.

June 23 the music section, Mrs. Harmon Ryus, curator, will entertain with an opera lecture of Horatio Parker's opera, "Fairyland." Mrs. Ethel Lynde will lecture, Will Garroway will be at the piano, and several of the arias will be sung. Mrs. W. S. Cross and Miss Augusta Lamb will be luncheon hostesses, at which the guests of honor will be Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Miss Marcella Craft, Mrs. Julius Eugene Kinney, Mrs. Emerson H. Brush, Cecil Fanning, Charles Wakefield Cadman and others prominent in the National Musical Federation.

Even an old go-cart need deter no one from entering, for when covered with flowers and greenery, it will become a thing of beauty.

Mrs. Isador Myers said that she had planned this baby parade two years ago and is exceedingly zealous that it be a great success.

During the afternoon President Adams grasped the opportunity to tell her coworkers how much she appreciated their help and loyalty the past year. Next year's work was outlined. Mrs. A. V. Fisher read from a short-story book written by Mrs. Janet Gargan, who, with her husband, is stopping in Southern California just now, but who plans to leave early in June for her Denver home. Life-giving.

COLORADO'S FLOW WILL AMPLY MEET ALL NEEDS.

Will Water Every Acre Dependent on the Stream in California, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming and Mexico, if Dam is Built, Says Authority—The Present Capacity Below Grand Canyon Thrice the Demand.

THE WATERS of the Colorado River are amply sufficient to serve all the lands irrigable by them in California, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming and Northern Mexico.

Although 1,200,000 acres below the Grand Canyon may be safely irrigated by the Colorado River under present conditions, but a little over one-third of this acreage is under canal.

The cultivated area dependent on the Colorado now for water is approximately 450,000 acres, of which close to 400,000 are in the Imperial Valley, 26,000 in the Yuma project and 20,000 in the Palo Verde country.

Thus the Colorado River could supply water for 750,000 acres additional now; by the construction of one reservoir, 500,000 more acres may be cultivated.

These are some of the things brought out in a report to the board of directors of the Imperial Irrigation District by Charles Robinson Rockwood, its chief engineer. He speaks from an experience with Colorado River projects dating back to 1893 and upon definite government and private statistics. The contents of his report was made public at El Centro yesterday.

ssion of priority right to take from the river the report of neer Rockwood stamps as idle useless, and jealousy by an es ished irrigation district of new as foolish and unfounded. because the report shows the supply three times that for lands under canal below Grand Canyon, and because it is ed that with 2,000,000 acre-feet stored water, the Colorado will irrigate every available acre in same region.

But even future time, with the maxi acreage and without storage of it is my opinion if we will perfected our distributing in the Imperial Valley that take all of the water from the during the low periods and con it to the land without unneces waste, there never will be a shortage."

irrigable acreage above the Canyon does not enter into Mr. wood's computations as to the of the Colorado River sup inasmuch as those lands will water only during the summer, the river is in flood and the more than ample for all needs. only would a large acreage the Grand Canyon diminish the of our floods, but all such become reservoirs that will, by means, increase our low flow," says the report. "It is bable the irrigated area on the watershed above the Grand will ever reach 500,000 acres. it were four times as great, as body of land under water help materially to solve our and silt problems and would other storage unnecessary."

reports of Imperial Water Number One give the actual of water in our valley over an sufficiently large to permit us to safely assume that the duty of water per acre is determined for the entire irrigible area.

"The investigations and surveys made by various interests allow us to determine that area with some degree of accuracy. Investigations and surveys made by the government show the feasibility of storage when we shall require it."

ASSEMBLES DATA.

Through detailed reports covering a period of five years, made by Imperial Water Company No. 1, one of the largest mutual water companies in the world, Mr. Rockwood arrived at figures which he accepted as the maximum quantity of water used per acre. From the government reports showing the discharge of the Colorado River each month over a ten-year period to date, he prepared a table, which appears herewith.

From the reports covering a certain month over the ten-year period, Mr. Rockwood selected the figures of the minimum discharges for that month during the decade and followed a similar procedure for each month in the year. From the same reports he secured the mean discharge. He divided these figures by the number showing the amount of water required per acre in the particular month and arrived at the figures giving the minimum and mean number of acres that would be irrigated if all the water were applied to the land. These are shown in the table, which also shows the amount of water consumed each month during 1914 by the Imperial Valley water users.

The figures showing the acreage irrigable under minimum and mean discharge does not take into consideration the loss by seepage and evaporation, Mr. Rockwood explains. He says that as the lands in Mexico near the source of supply are brought under cultivation, the percentage by seepage will be lessened and when the channel of the Alamo River, the main supply canal, now wide and shallow in many places, is narrowed, the loss by evaporation to Imperial water users will be also lessened.

"It is probable, too, that greater experience and study in the crop needs will prove to our water users that they will obtain better returns from a lower average use of water than now obtains and that in ten years the reduction will be sufficient to offset the total loss from seepage and evaporation," the report says.

With the number of acres irrigable determined and parted down 20 per cent. as a margin of safety, the report passes to the possible area. He estimates that below the Needles there are approximately 1,700,000 acres which may eventually require water, 200,000 acres of which are above the Laguna Dam. He divides the 1,500,000 acres below the dam as follows:

Yuma Project, 100,000 acres; Imperial Valley, 700,000 acres; Lower California, 500,000 acres, and Sonora Mesa, 200,000 acres.

"The figures in the table show that the mean flow of the river in each calendar month is sufficient for the irrigation of the entire irrigable area below the Grand Canyon," the report says. "When the entire 1,700,000 acres are under cultivation, some storage will be necessary to furnish an absolutely safe supply for the months of July, August, September and October."

THE DRY MONTHS.

Mr. Rockwood then takes up the record of those months over the ten-year period.

"There has been but one July in the past ten years in which the flow has been insufficient to irrigate 1,700,000 crop acres and as out of a total of possible area under canal of 1,700,000, it is not probable that more than 1,500,000 will actually be in crop in any one year, we may safely assume that the July water supply is safe for the entire area.

"The August supply is safe until the area under canal reaches 1,200,000 acres. When the entire 1,700,000 is under canal there will be, without storage, a shortage one year in three. September is safe for 1,000,000 acres under canal and during the ten years covered by these observations, in only two, viz., 1905 and 1910, would there have been any shortage with 1,200,000 acres under canal.

"The lowest October month would have furnished water for 1,400,000 acres under canal. The greatest amount of stored water required to have furnished an ample supply for 1,700,000 acres in crop in the lowest recorded month would have been for July, 75,000 acre-feet; August, 244,000; September, 354,000, and October, 111,000; while the greatest yearly shortage, that of 1910, would have required 440,000 feet."

In his resume Mr. Rockwood concludes that the supply of water at present is safe for 1,200,000 acres and that with 2,000,000 acre-feet of stored water, the supply will safely irrigate every available acre below the Grand Canyon, including all lands in Mexico.

FOR THE ARGENTINE.

Prominent Los Angeles Contractor Starts for South America to Inspect Business Openings.

One of the most enterprising of Los Angeles contractors, C. A. Fellows, will start for the East this morning, preparatory to sailing for the Argentine June 12. The great Hanlon's heading gate is on American soil, below Yuma, and there the water diverted from the Colorado River is controlled. The new Encina flume betterments have just been completed at a cost approximately of one hundred thousand dollars and greatly improve water service to the west side of the valley.

Political Situation.

THE MUNICIPAL CANDIDATES PUT UNDER THE MICROSCOPE.

IT IS SOLELY for the purpose of guiding the voters toward accepting the very best material available that The Times ventures to say something about the qualifications (or lack of them) of each candidate aspiring to office. There is no desire to injure, to be unfair or unjust to any candidate or measure. Clip the following and attach it to the sample ballot for reference at the polls on Tuesday:

MAYOR.

Neither of the two candidates for this office is a strong man. Comparatively, however, both measure up well with the Mayors we have been blessed with in the past. There are a great many men in Los Angeles who would make a better Mayor than either Charles E. Sebastian or Frederick J. Whiffen, but these two are the only ones available. The campaign has not been conducted upon issues involving the relative merits of the two candidates. The contest has been a weird, uncanny affair, in which the qualifications of one candidate were eclipsed by the sympathy showered upon the other. Toward the end, the hysteria lifted and this is the picture held up for public gaze on the eve of election:

Charles E. Sebastian—Poor boy, grocer's clerk, farmhand, policeman, lieutenant of police and finally Chief of Police; the only Chief Los Angeles has had who instituted genuine human reforms in police and prison work. A man whose magnetic personality has attracted to his support men and women, factions and interests that never before have met on common ground; who has demonstrated the wonderful faculty of bringing into his campaign activities men and women of all shades of political opinion; earnest men have met in his headquarters who cheer in unison for Sebastian, who would hardly speak to each other because of personal feeling. Chief Sebastian was the victim of a conspiracy, handsomely vindicated by the people and later by a jury, and now seeks further vindication. If his administration can be attended with a successful amelioration of factional strife, if it can bring harmony to the diversified political interests of Los Angeles, it will have accomplished much.

Frederick J. Whiffen—Another self-made man, a money-lender until he went in for politics; has been a successful Councilman, although the last two years during his incumbency of the chairmanship of the Finance Committee the city has unfortunately drifted upon financial shoals, more because of the extraordinary demands than because of bad management; Mr. Whiffen is an old man, whose one great ambition is to become Mayor of Los Angeles; he offers himself equipped with a knowledge of every department of the government, but with a strong leaning toward finances rather than to the human or moral side of government. He is impulsive and often given to a change of mind upon many important problems; he has demonstrated an ability to enlist the services of certain interests with which he has never been aligned, nor even friendly; his indorsement by the saloon organization in the face of his well-known anti-saloon record, proves his ability for harmonizing antagonistic influences; he is opposed by union labor because he has not bowed down and worshiped the walking delegate; he has voted for improvements by special assessment; yet he is against the special assessment plan. His campaign organization consists mainly of men and women who have never been in sympathy with his ideals and work, and those who were naturally expected to be supporting him have fled into obscurity. During all the time that the campaign was befogged with the sordid details of the Sebastian case, Mr. Whiffen conducted himself in a dignified maner, and took no advantage of the "material" that the case afforded. If elected his administration will be attended with considerable uncertainty, but on the whole he is rather conservative.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

(Vote for seven.)

The Times believes that the best interests of the school of Los Angeles will be served through the election of the so-called pro-Francis ticket, consisting of six members, and the election of ex-Judge Walter Bordwell, an avowed "neutral" in the factional strife that has hampered the orderly administration of the school system. Supt. Francis has been reappointed and will serve beyond the term for which the incoming board shall be elected, and it is necessary that there be harmony during his service. As his work has been efficient and has attracted the attention of all the great cities of the East, those candidates who best typify his ideas and ideals should be elected. The qualifications of J. H. Bean, N. E. Crandall, C. H. V. Lewis, C. J. McCormick, W. A. Spalding and Mr. Bordwell are such as to insure a very high order of efficiency and progress in the management of the school system. Vote for them. Another candidate of whom only good words can be said is W. J. Washburn.

MEMBERS OF COUNCIL.

Martin F. Betkouski—Incumbent; a valuable man in the city government; has taken important work on the Public Service and Annexation commissions and has borne the brunt of a heavy load in the Council. His record commends him for re-election.

Robert T. Brain—Former railroad man and Undersheriff; now in the auto supply business, and a successful business man. Anything but a "longhair;" a quiet, unassuming man with liberal ideas. He is well qualified, and would make an excellent Councilman. Let's have a real Brain in the Council.

John S. Conwell—Far and away the biggest man in the present Council; a successful business man, a conservative, with down-to-the-minute ideas; his conservative work on the Efficiency Commission and other boards and his service on the Finance Committee, as well as his general record in the last two years in the Council, entitle him to another term.

R. W. Dromgold—Formerly in the Council; a sign painter; his previous public service was creditable.

Clara Shortridge Foltz—A woman attorney, good in both instances; has many constructive ideas that are not altogether feminine; she would bring to the Council an element of wisdom and thoughtful strength, and would make a lasting record as a hard-working public servant. A vote for Mrs. Foltz is a vote for good government and good citizenship.

E. C. Hampton—A Hollywood business man, and like the late lamented Mr. Allen, "not a politician." An energetic worker and a highly trained observer of business conditions; Hollywood should have representation on this Council, and Mr. Hampton is just the man for the place.

Henry A. Hart—The man who assayed the aqueduct and found 100 per cent. cyanide; a restless disturber; a Socialist who has become addicted to a habit of running for office, although he has been told countless times his services are not required; a synonym for bunk.

Dr. Arthur D. Houghton—An effervescing creature who affects tortoise shell glasses, with heavy black ribbons; doubtless affects wrist watches and white sox, as well; if the faddists are entitled to representation, "Spook" Houghton should be elected by a tremendous majority; if the next Council is to be safe and sane it will be no place for that sort of a minister's son.

Dr. Frederick C. Langdon—A Councilman who has made good; in the process of rendering unto the people that degree of service to which they are entitled, Dr. Langdon has done his duty, plus. The first nine in the Tuesday count should contain his name, well along toward the top.

Estelle Lawton Lindsey—A tireless worker in the cause of womanhood, childhood and humanity; a Socialist who leaves the bombs and the dynamite home for the children to play with; there seems to be no extraordinary reason why she should be elected, but the fact that she has shown her independence of the walking delegate and the red-card hierarchy is commendable.

D. F. McLaughlin—An insurance man and former Humane Officer; the man who "got" Guy Eddie; has made a conservative, consistent campaign and no compromising alliances; is highly recommended by business men and others; a recognized friend of the juvenile and wayward.

W. A. Roberts—Former Assemblyman, represents Highland Park, himself and an unseen hand in the Council; has a record for vacillation; his inconsistent attitude on the gas situation and his stupid and studied attempts at "grandstanding" for the benefit of the "common peepul" stamp him as unbalanced in judgment. The next Council could struggle along very happily without him.

John Topham—Police Commissioner four years and Councilman two years; defeated for re-election; should not be elected now.

Fred C. Wheeler—A Socialist who has seen the light from the inside; an apostate from the red car; independent in his views on most civic questions, a deep thinker and an effective worker for the city's good; his record in the Council has been commendable.

E. L. Williams—The lone hope of the jitbus; a failure in most other lines, as evidenced by the fact that he has dipped into nearly everything with no apparent degree of success; a young adventurer who has the mistaken notion that this jitney bus is entitled to representation; because of his unfamiliarity with city government and his evident fear to engage in a debate, he has adopted the somewhat neutral and entirely safe method of singing instead of speaking on the stump.

George Williams—A Councilman who has earned another term; a successful grocer, a quiet, effective legislator with a head full of genuine sense; has suffered by reason of the confusion over too many Williamses on the ballot; voters should single out the name of George Williams, the middle Williams of the three, and stamp a cross beside it. He is worthy of cordial support.

T. W. Williams—A dangerous firebrand of the extreme radical Socialist type; impracticable, a dreamer of nightmares; a perpetual officeseeker and constant disturber.

Foster C. Wright—A smart young fellow with lots of energy and ability; former newspaper man and now an attorney who has been successful; does not lack initiative; has constructive ideas and is sane.

BOARD OF FREEHOLDERS.

Thirty candidates for the Board of Freeholders are aspiring to office; fifteen of them will be elected and their task will be to assemble charter ideas and work them over into a new form of charter to replace the existing affair. Whatever they decide upon will later be submitted to the people for adoption or rejection.

As the election of candidates to this board is only a tentative step toward making a new charter, and since the people still have the right of review of the work accomplished, no recommendations are made, as the product of the board is not final.

PROPOSITIONS AND ORDINANCES

Vote yes on the annexation of Bairdstown.

Vote no on the question of determining the city policy with regard to interchange of telephone service; the Council should be big enough to settle that question and if the people don't favor the Council's decision they still have the right of review.

Vote yes on the acceptance of gifts for Griffith Park.

Vote no on the vehicle tax ordinance, which virtually ties the hands of the Council and gives that body no alternative but to pass a measure which is clearly class legislation; this also should be left to the judgment of the Council.

Vote yes on initiative ordinance providing for employment of visiting tuberculosis nurses; the ordinance provides that the city shall employ one visiting nurse for each 100 cases of tuberculosis reported. In the interest of humanity, sanitation and war on the plague this is a good step.

Vote no on the jitney bus ordinance, which is neither regulation of the jitbus nor protection to the public; the initiative has been drafted in the interest of the jitney bus drivers and few, if any, safeguards to the general public are provided.

Dreaded an Operation More Than Anything

Tried Fruitola and Traxo and Has Never Since Been Troubled With Gall-stones.

Mrs. Mary E. Franse, whose address is West Point, Neb., Box 411, has written to the Pinus laboratories a very strong endorsement of Fruitola and Traxo. In her letter, Mrs. Franse says: "About ten years ago I was about to undergo an operation for gall-stones when I heard of your medicine. Dreading an operation above everything I determined to try Fruitola and Traxo and have never been sorry I did so, as I have never been troubled with gall-stones since."

Fruitola is a powerful lubricant for the intestinal organs, and one dose is usually sufficient to give ample evidence of its efficacy. It softens the congested masses, disintegrates the hardened particles that occasion so much suffering, and expels the accumulated waste to the intense relief of the patient. Following a dose of Fruitola, Traxo should be taken three or four times a day in order to rebuild and restore the system that has been weakened and run down by constant suffering. It is a splendid tonic, acting on the liver and stomach most benefically.

MRS. MARY E. FRANSE.

In the files of the Pinus laboratories at Monticello, Ill., are many letters gratefully asknowledging the satisfactory results following the use of Fruitola and Traxo. Arrangements have been made for the distribution of these excellent remedies by leading drug stores everywhere. In Los Angeles Fruitola and Traxo can be obtained at the stores of The Owl Drug Company.

"Drys" Face Crisis.

good to humanity, the balancing of boys and girls, of manhood and womanhood against dollars, then the whole traffic must go."

The letter continues:

"We believe a very large number of voters consider wine the most important feature of the liquor question because wine is the most dangerous beverage made and one which the Bible expressly prohibits. Informed persons acknowledge that boys and girls usually begin their drinking career with wine.

"We believe it extremely unwise to divide the issue, as the liquor men are certain to offer one or more alternative amendments knowing that confusion lessens our chances of winning. In our opinion our proposition must be stated concisely in one amendment upon which we can concentrate our undivided efforts. It is important to bear in mind that the average voter is easily confused and that when confused very many vote wrong or do not vote at all."

The Good Templars suggest the substitution of "liquor traffic" for the word "saloon" in further discussions of "California dry."

The amendment submitted by the Good Templars provides for complete abolition of liquor of all kinds, except that for scientific use. Immediate confiscation is extended to any county, city or municipality, and generally it is provided that all liquor and all visible means of manufacture must disappear by July, 1917.

This Amendment covers every angle of the strictest enforcement of the law. It provides that the presence of a revenue stamp shall be prima facie evidence of guilt, that any citizen may make use of the search and seizure law and the injunction.

In no way does the proposition temporize with the liquor traffic. It demands utter prohibition and nothing less.

NOT SO RADICAL.

The fate of the State-wide prohibition amendment in 1914, when it was defeated by an overwhelming vote, has caused a number of dry advocates to compromise in order to win part of the ground desired, if not all.

Between the radicals and those who believe in playing safe there is a wide difference of opinion and out of this breach will come a warm controversy at Fresno.

The convention is not under the auspices of the California Dry Federation, but will have delegates from the Anti-Saloon League, the Prohibition party, the Federation and the Good Templars, as well as from a number of other organizations interested in the demolition of the demon rum.

FOR A TWO-YEAR STRETCH.

Ex-Pugilist Goes Not to Jail, but on Water Wagon to Prevent Incarceration.

Michael Joseph Donovan, former middleweight prize fighter and personal friend of Jim Corbett, went on the water wagon yesterday for two years. He told the police judge he knew it would be something fierce to quench his thirst with grape juice for such a long period, but he would rather emulate W.J.B. for the rest of his life than to spend the next thirty days in the City Jail.

"Mike" was arrested Friday afternoon in front of a 5-and-10-cent store on Spring street, one of the clerks accusing him of stealing a 10-cent ring. The clerk admitted that he did not see the former "pug" take the jewelry, but thought the evidence was conclusive in as much as the ring fell from Donovan's finger as he was leaving the store.

"If Jim Corbett were only here I might have some chance," the physical giant told the judge. "You see, Jim knows that I never stole nothin' in my life, not even a championship belt. Ever since Jack Johnson got licked I have been celebratin', for I sure was glad to see the belt get back to the race that ought to have it. I will admit I have been drinkin' too much and was drunk yesterday, but I did not steal that ring."

Appetite Follows Good Digestion

Nearly everyone indulges their appetite and the digestive organs are abused, resulting in a congestion of poisonous waste that clogs the bowels and causes much misery and distress.

The most effective remedy to correct this condition is the combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This is a natural, pleasant-tasting remedy, gentle, yet positive in action, and quickly relieves indigestion, constipation, sick headache, belching, etc. Drug stores sell Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, and in thousands of homes it is the indispensable family remedy. For a free trial bottle write Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 452 Washington street, Monticello, Ills.

Coincidence.

ROYAL HEADS OF AMARANTH.

SUPREME PATRON AND SUPREME MATRON BOTH HERE.

First Assembly of Lodge Ever Held Outside New York to Meet in San Francisco Third Week in June—Eight Southern California Courts Hosts to the Chiefs.

By a somewhat unusual coincidence Los Angeles is now housing both the Supreme Royal Patron and the Supreme Royal Matron of the Order of Amaranth—a condition said to have never before obtained except in New York City and then only at the time of the meeting of the Supreme Council of the lodge.

The Royal Matron is Mrs. Anna M. Shipman of Orange, N. Y., here as the guest of the six Los Angeles courts, while on her way to the assembly to be held in San Francisco June 21 and 22—the first national gathering of the order ever held outside of New York. The Supreme Patron is a Los Angeles resident—Elmer W. Riggle of No. 1455 Norton avenue. Mrs. Shipman is the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. Riggle during her stay, which will be until June 14. She was entertained by the members of Royal Court with a card party at the home of Mrs. Roberts, No. 1110 West Twenty-seventh street, Thursday, and by Golden Crown Court of Pasadena on Friday.

Other local courts are the Los Angeles, South Gate, Aloha, Daylight and Moneta of Los Angeles, and Long Beach of Long Beach.

New courts in four States were organized by Mrs. Shipman on her way West. The order was formed as an adjunct to Masonic bodies forty-two year ago.

Divination Professor.

formed by the interpreter, T. Takagi of Los Angeles—for Prof. Kodama does not speak English—expressed the greatest satisfaction and gratitude for the prophetic advice given, and recorded his expression of favor in an ideographic page to which was affixed the President's personal seal. Anyone who can read it can see for himself.

The professor says that ekigaker is not an esoxteric science, that the study is open to any and all who wish to take it up and that, if one is naturally adapted for the work, at the end of some three years of hard, continuous study one should be able to receive the messages of the gods with some degree of accuracy. He has been studying twenty-one years, was the favorite pupil of the late K. Takashima, and does not claim infallibility.

INTERPRETING SYMBOLS.

"I myself am nothing," Prof. Kodama said. "I invoke the God to whom I pray and he sends me his message through symbols. I interpret these symbols."

There are 384 major symbols and 69,382 minor symbols, or words, by means of which the professor receives his message, and he can con them by rote backwards or sidewise.

"As I study more," he went on, "I become more proficient. I find I am now usually right nine times out of ten."

K. Takashima, who took Kodama as his disciple, has been called the "keenest-minded man in Japan"—which is putting it rather strong. But he was better known in finance and commerce than as a divinator; the Japanese "Who's Who" bluntly ranks him as a millionaire, and it is reported that by his gifts of prophecy he was able to acquire his fortune. It is certain that he acquired the fortune and won such recognition that the Emperor and Empress of Japan themselves paid a visit to Takashima's private residence—which, in Japanese etiquette, is about the highest courtesy a civilian can be shown. Takashima also predicted the day, hour and minute of his own death—October 16, 1914, at 3 o'clock p.m. It was at Taskashima's suggestion that Prof. Kodama went to Peking and met President Yuan; it was also at Takashima's suggestion that Prof. Kodama undertook the tour of the United States and Canada.

Just a word more about Takashima, in whose household Prof. Kodama lived for years. He had three daughters and married one to a prince, one to a baron and one to a lieutenant-general. The gift of prophecy is said to have aided him there. On another occasion he predicted an earthquake in a Japanese city and ordered a huge amount of lumber in advance to prepare for it, and so succeeded in getting most of the building contracts after the earthquake came, thereby adding greatly to his fortune.

Neither Prof. Kodama nor his interpreter, Mr. Takagi, spoke of this. But mention of it may be found in a laudatory article in the Japanese Magazine (Tokio,) March, of this year.

DIVINATION BY RODS.

Prof. Kodama uses the method of divination by rods, which, with the Bible, Talmud and Koran for authority, may be considered perhaps the oldest method of attempting to seize facts prematurely from the hands of the gods.

The Bible, Talmud and Koran all refer to and sometimes explain the method of divination by consulting "the rods of Aaron," "the arrows" or "spears of Elisha," the "arrows of Nebuchadnezzar."

The course of study and training is not required to learn to manipulate the fifty short, slender bamboo rods used in ekigaker, but to be able to put the mind into the proper receptive mood to receive the symbols from the gods. The manipulation of the rods and blocks is largely a ceremonial rite, a sort of prayer, accompanying the invocation.

The explanation of the rite as practiced by Prof. Kodama is that the fifty rods are taken from their vase of lacquer and gold and reverently raised toward heaven, then the forehead is touched so that the inspiration may descend to the diviner. One rod, representing the "Almighty Spirit," is placed back in the vase before him. Looking at this intently and rolling the other rods carelessly but methodically, his face is suddenly transformed; his eyes close, his body trembles as with intense emotion and a spasm of pain seems reflected in his face—the face of a dreamer. He suddenly separates the rods, and instantly his composure is regained. Those in his right hand, representing "earth," are laid aside; those remaining in the left hand are quickly counted by couples, including one rod that has been separated from the "earth" group and this rod is held between the ring and the little finger of the left hand, pointing outward. It symbolizes the one making inquiries of the "Almighty Spirit."

The remaining rods are recorded by the dice, dominoes, blocks of wood heavily lacquered and painted black with strange symbols inset. A broad red band runs through the center of one side of the blocks. The reverse shows a thin red line shaped like a hollow square. These cubes form the magic hexagrams, and as they become grouped according to the laws of the divided rods they are easily translated through the symbols which the student must keep in mind.

It must be admitted that Prof. Kodama is rather a "good guesser"—if one is skeptical of his divining powers. Newspaper clippings of months past show that many predictions made have come true. He told when Huerta would leave Mexico; that China would yield to Japan without fighting; gave the approximate date for outbreak of the European war; that unusual prosperity would come to the United States after the first six months of the war.

AS TO THE MAYORALTY.

When asked to let us have a little advance information on the mayoralty campaign, Prof. Kodama made the computations of Chief Sebastian's and Mr. Whiffen's fortunes and stated that Chief Sebastian has been suffering from a severe case of overconfidence, but is rapidly getting over it; and that it would be a good thing for him to do so; that Mr. Whiffen is working hard night and day, and making so many votes that Chief Sebastian is going to have a very narrow escape from defeat. "But," he spoke through the interpreter, "his fortunes seems to indicate that he will be barely elected."

A SPREADING TREE.

Asked concerning the future of Los Angeles, Prof. Kodama grew enthusiastic. "For Los Angeles I get the symbol of a great tree. Its roots grow deeper and deeper into the ground, its branches spread and bear rich fruit. I see the fortunes of Los Angeles allied with those of the South, with Mexico. The years 1917, 1918 and 1919 will be the most prosperous that Los Angeles has ever known, and her fortunes are identified with San Diego and San Pedro."

Some time ago he had divined that the Republican party would be restored to office in 1916. Asking for a list of possible candidates he undertook to tell which will be elected. Senator Borah, Senator Root and Mr. Taft were mentioned. For Senator Borah he got the symbol of a boat putting out to sea with flying sails and then springing a leak, which he interpretated as meaning that Borah's candidacy will not prosper. Senator Root, he said, will have a powerful influence, but will extend it to Mr. Taft and after the election he saw Senator Root being given a high place of authority in the government. Mr. Taft, he said, does not want to be a candidate; but he will reunite the Progressives to the Republican party and will be elected.

OTHER PREDICTIONS.

Other predictions made by Prof. Kodama are:

President Wilson will be popular, but his party will not be at the expiration of his term.

Sometime near March, 1916, President Wilson will marry a widow, after which he will live in New York.

The Kaiser will not be crushed by the fortunes of war; seven years after peace is restored he will have rehabilitated his nation.

Neither the allies nor the Teutonic alliance will gain or suffer much by the terms of peace in Europe, but Turkey will sustain heavy losses.

Japan and the United States will remain friendly. As a symbol of each nation he sees thunder but no lightning, which, being interpreted, means that there will be much talk and noise, but no actual clash, and in a few years complete harmony will be established.

The great popularity of Theodore Roosevelt is ended. His symbol is a man going downhill; his health will remain good, but he has lost the ear of the people.

He says he reads in the signs of the eki that the Kaiser and Kaiserin are not in accord about the war, and that there is or has been friction between them.

THE PROFESSOR.

Prof. Kodama was born thirty-eight years ago at Obi, in the Island of Kyushu, and belongs to the Samuri clan of Lord Ito. He was left an orphan at the age of five, and he spent a lonely childhood. Almost from the first he was attracted to the study of the Chinese classics, and being of a dreamy, mystical nature, began to take up divination. His predictions grew bolder, more accurate, his knowledge of the ancient Chinese classics increased to such an extent that he attracted the attention of Takashima who took him into his own home. Prof. Kodama, beyond making himself miserable to conform to the custom of our country's tailors (he says our clothes are most uncomfortable) says he is not inconvenienced by being in any country. He likes to see and learn; and though very modest about his predictions—saying that while the gods never err yet he sometimes misinterprets their symbols—is gracious and patient in explaining the science of divination. He insists that it is a "science."

He is stopping at the Pacific Hotel and expects to remain in Los Angeles for two weeks, visiting the places of interest that usually attract tourists. "The fame of Los Angeles has reached far," he said. "I have seen the great future that is before it, and I wish to familiarize myself with its present beauties."

Topanga Road Opening.

the new road. H. J. Whitley (the host of the day,) State Highway Commissioner Darlington and Road Commissioner Joyner were in this car. They were followed by a car containing members of the Board of Supervisors and Mayor Rose.

The attendance of the Mayor was particularly interesting, as about halfway up to the summit of the Santa Monica Mountains had been placed a sign board labeled "New City Limits of Los Angeles." It is only one of a number of sign boards put up by the Automobile Club of Southern California, but it was the one that attracted everybody's attention as evidence of the continued growth of the city.

A band and singers entertained the touring automobilists previous to the brief round of speechmaking in which the county was represented by Supervisor Hinshaw, the city by the Mayor, the State by Highway Commissioner Darlington, the Automobile Club of Southern California by Carl E. McStay, special representative, and the board of control of the Los Angeles Suburban Homes Company by H. J. Whitley and George Hanna.

PRIVATE AID.

This latter company's part in the affair was significant, as it was the board of control of this concern that built the first four miles of the road and really started the movement that ended yesterday with the official dedication of the new scenic thoroughfare to the people.

"On behalf of the settlers in these grand old mountains and this beautiful valley," said Mr. Whitley, "and the Board of Supervisors, Mr. Joyner, our road commissioner, and Mr. Davidson, superintendent of construction, the Automobile Club and our board of control, I take pleasure in welcoming you here today. We feel highly honored in having present with us the Mayor of Los Angeles, now the second largest city in area in the United States (and we hope soon it will be in population;) also the Mayors of adjacent cities, and other distinguished guests. It plainly goes to show the great interest taken by the citizens of Los Angeles and Los Angeles county in the building and opening up of good roads, which add more to comfort, pleasure and value than any one improvement.

"Thirteen years ago it was my pleasure to take a leading part in the opening up of the first boulevard from the Sisters' Hospital to and through beautiful Hollywood. At that time there were only ninety-two automobiles owned in Los Angeles. Today I understand from the secretary of the Automobile Club of Southern California there are 26,000. It is unnecessary for me to say that this Automobile Club has been an important factor in aiding and bringing about the building of good roads throughout California. The good roads have done much to develop the country, increase the value of property, bring the people closer together and make it possible for our tourists to see the lovely valleys and the charming mountains all over Southern California. Good roads add ten times what they cost to property values.

"It is now nearly six years since I took an auto trip near where this road runs today. It was considered at that time dangerous and it was a question whether we would get through to the ocean or not. Several were in the party, including our Board of Supervisors. Our object was then, and has been ever since, to get a good road from the west end of the San Fernando Valley to the ocean. After making this then hazardous trip, rounding the steep grades, narrow roads and dangerous curves, and passing difficult places, which seemed almost impossible for an auto to get through in safety, I asked Mr. Pridham, chairman of our Board of Supervisors, what could be done to improve this road. After making this trip he suggested that the first thing to do was to put up signs, 'Prepare to meet thy God.'

"Today we celebrate the opening of a broad new highway through these mountains and not the signs suggested by Mr. Pridham, but those erected by the Automobile Club of Southern California, the most efficient organization of its kind in the United States.

THOSE WHO HELPED.

"It is a fitting time to speak of those who have given their money, time, skill and labor to the opening and construction of this highway; the tedious labor of the settlers in these mountains securing the rights of way and donations and the remarkable skill of our County Surveyor, Mr. I. B. Nable, in locating a road with such easy grades and broad curves; the expert supervision of our Road Commissioner, Mr. F. H. Joyner, and his capable superintendent of construction, Mr. William Davidson, who have proven their ability under most trying difficulties. Mr. Haas, Mr. Smale, Mr. Holmes and Mr. Simpson, foremen of road construction, and Mr. Buckman and Mr. Simpson, foremen of bridge construction, are deserving of great praise for their constant, untiring efforts. Mr. Pridham and all the other members of the Board of Supervisors have at all times done everything they consistently could to make this road possible. Many have given time and money to this enterprise actuated only by a desire to add another splendid scenic driveway to the Southern California good-road system. Above all, let us pay a royal tribute to the workmen who grubbed and toiled with pick and shovel—the men who literally moved mountains for our comfort and pleasure."

"About five years ago," said Mr. Hanna, "Mr. H. J. Whitley, to whose skill and ability is due the construction of Sherman Way, ably backed up by the other four members of the board of control of the Los Angeles Suburban Homes Company, took up the matter of building this road. Today, you see it completed largely through their efforts and also as a result of large expenditures by them."

Mayor Rose spoke of the significance of knitting the San Fernando Valley to the beach towns by a scenic thoroughfare and Supervisor Hinshaw told of some of the problems that had been met and solved in the course of the work.

THE STORY OF "FAIRYLAND."

Analysis of Brian Hooker's Poetical Libretto to The Prize Opera Which is to Be Given Here Soon—Is It American?

BY HENRY CHRISTEEN WARNACK

LOS ANGELES wanted an American opera and it paid $10,000 to get one. "Fairyland" is, and it isn't. It is by an American, but not of America.

In one respect it qualifies as American—in so far as the words without music goes—namely in the conclusion it reaches. In nearly all foreign operas the lovers have to renounce each other for the sake of the church or the government. In "Fairyland" the girl forsakes the church and the man his kingdom for the sweetness of human love.

This new order of holiness is American. It is American in its robustness of conscience and in the courage of such a conviction.

Of course, no grand opera is going to let anybody be happy if it knows it. Nobody is going to be allowed to fall in love for any other purpose than to make him miserable. The heroes and heroines never marry. Neither the author of the book nor the music would ever stand for that. They don't in this case. The girl is burned at the stake because she doesn't want to grow up into an abbess, and the king is killed before her eyes by his brother, the usurper, and the two loving spirits, free of the body, wake up in Fairyland, where he is the king and she is the queen, and where they are wedded in happiness.

Thus, you see, that while they do not marry, their intentions have been honorable and American.

I could say all this in bigger words that meant less and before I am through I probably will. I am dead in earnest when I say that this idea of making marriage the most holy thing in life is entirely American as an operatic theme and exactly illustrates the difference between the philosophy of the East and the West.

It is simply action as opposed to negation, and possession as the antithesis of denial. It is the difference between a sea cucumber that spends its existence at the bottom of the ocean waiting for life to come and touch it, or rather for life to flow over it and never touch it, and young Yankee-Doodle going out with a chip on his shoulder looking for trouble in a hundred quarters at the same time.

Nearly all eastern philosophy and religion advises you not to have anything and to give that up at the first opportunity. The western idea sometimes does not resist evil, but that is only because it is so busy chasing the most immediate opportunity that it hasn't a minute of time for turning the other cheek. The American who wants to be good doesn't go to a llamisary or a nunnery, but gathers a bank roll and writes a check. The American man is not a celibate and the American woman is not an abbess. Instead, they join forces and organize a small anti-race suicide society of their own.

It is a source of profound regret to me that in our first American opera the hero and the heroine could not show us exactly how completely occidental their theory was; but, as I have already intimated, opera ceases to be grand when suspected of being happy.

"Fairyland" is also American in the pure vigor of its verse, and in the fact that it is delicate without being decadent.

It is distinctly not American in its setting.

A fairy story is not of any land, but such locale as our prize opera has, Brian Hooker, the Yale author of the libretto, has given to a town in Central Europe. So long as book and music are by citizens of the United States, the location of an imaginary scene is of no consequence.

More serious objection might be offered to the persons as being also un-American. Having to do with a king, a prince, an abbess and a novice, the caste is not even remotely American and such a story could not, of course, be located elsewhere than in Europe.

In America, to be sure, we have oil kings, butter kings, celery kings and whatnot, yet they would be unlikely pegs upon which to hang a fairy opera.

Neither our Yale composers nor the committee on selection are to be blamed for this. We must accept the point that this is American music, straight from the home soil, and not for a moment must we quibble over the superficial fact that fairies may not also be indigenous to that soil, or that they have at least as yet failed to make up any considerable portion of our national life.

I, for one, hold that fairies are always in order, and, so holding, I cannot other than accept with utter welcome the gentle mysteries of this important epoch.

Any story identified with this faint borderland and aiming, as the author confesses, at a mediaeval realm of fancy, could hardly approximate greatness.

Lovely enough for grand opera, I grant you, but large enough—I seriously question. Only the rare fortune of adequate music could, I think, have brought this beautiful work to any considerable attention.

Its beauty is elevating, but, judging from the book alone, one would be justified in assuming that the music sustaining it must all but overpower the theme to carry it beyond the happy limits of light opera, which it would have been, of course, had the lovers been married instead of executed.

I do not mean to say that the love story of one man and one woman is not great enough as a theme for grand opera. The Bible has been a fairly successful book with only Adam and Eve as the basis of a story. Besides there are themes so lofty in their simplicity as to establish themselves upon the literary and musical heights.

Only a conjoining of the music and the book of "Fairyland" will prove

DRAMA AND VAUDEVILLE.

Spectacular Musical Show for the Mason Operahouse.

Marjorie Rambeau Returns to the Burbank.

Orpheum to Feature Bunch of Big Acts.

"Sari," with Mizzi Hajos as the star, will be the offering at the Mason this week, opening with a special matinee tomorrow.

"Sari" is said to be the biggest success in the way of an operetta in Europe or this country for a number of years. It rivals "The Merry Widow" in popularity, and contains many song hits with which the public is already familiar, from having heard them in the cafes and at dances.

The piece ran for a year and a half in New York, and has made a corresponding big success in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and San Francisco.

Mizzi Hajos of "Spring Maid" fame created the leading role in "Sari" in New York, and is said to be quite as delightful and sparkling as when seen in her former success.

Other well-known actors of the company are Charles Meakins, J. K.

JUNE'S COMING SPELLS BIG THINGS IN MUSIC.

Great Festival and Convention of a National Federation to Occur Latter Part of Approaching Month. Programme of Events—Orpheus Club Concert this Week.

The advent of the month of June, contrary to the usual schedule, spells big things in the local musical world this season. American composers are to have their day with a vengeance at the music festival in this city the latter part of the coming month. In fact, the "no-admittance" sign is up for all others.

The attractions for the programmes of the National Federation of Musical Clubs' convention have been pretty well determined on. Not only will there be nearly two weeks of recitals and concerts, but also no end of lectures and symposiums on things musical.

The crowning event will, of course, be the production of the $10,000 prize grand opera, "Fairyland," with a cast of celebrated principals, several of international fame, under the direction of Alfred Hertz, the eminent conductor, formerly of the Metropolitan Operahouse.

PRIZE AMERICAN OPERA.

Premiere $10,000 prize American opera, "Fairyland" (by Horatio W. Parker and Brian Hooker,) Thursday evening, July 1. Artists engaged.

Marcella Craft, soprano, Rosamund; Kathleen Howard, mezzo, Myriel, the Abbess; Albert Reiss, lyric tenor, Robin, surnamed Goodfellow; William Wade Hinshaw, bass, Corvain; Ralph Errolle, tenor, Auburn; prima ballerina, Albertina Rasch; Alfred Hertz, conductor; stage director, Louis F. Gottschalk.

"Fairyland" Principal.

Nearly all the principals of the "Fairyland" cast are in Southern California. The rest will arrive early this coming month.

One of the most recent arrivals is Ralph Errolle, the American tenor, who is to create the part of Auburn, the leading male role in the opera. He was formerly with the Chicago Opera Company.

Mr. Errolle was born in the midwest metropolis. He received his artistic education from Hermann Devries of the Paris Grand Opera. While studying with this great instructor he perfected himself in French and Italian and mastered a large number of tenor roles.

He made his professional debut in the title role of "Fra Diavolo" before he was 19 years old, and after seven years of continuous study and professional work made his first appearance with the Chicago Grand Opera Company as Lionel in "Martha," in which role he was very successful.

Last year he had started around the world on a two-year concert tour, but while he was in Australia the European war was declared and he decided to return to America.

Orpheus Club Concert.

Under the direction of J. P. Dupuy the Orpheus Club will give a very pleasing programme at its third and last concert of the season Thursday evening at Trinity Auditorium. The club will be assisted by Mrs. Maud Reeves Barnard, mezzo soprano. Will Garroway will be at the piano.

Mrs. Barnard has been soloist in some of the best choirs of Los Angeles, such as at Christ Church, Trinity Church, Temple B'nai B'rith, and, at present, at the First Presbyterian Church. She will sing a group of songs and also the solos in the Brahms Rhapsody and Ecstacy of Mrs. H. H. A. Beach.

The following numbers will also be given by the club:

To create "Fairyland" role.

Ralph Errolle, American operatic tenor, who will sing part of Auburn in Horatio Parker's ten-thousand-dollar prize work.

Big Choral Concert.

Unusual interest attaches to the concert to be given by the Los Angeles Festival Orchestra and the University Choral Society next Sunday at Clune's Auditorium under the direction of John David Beall. The full programme has not yet been made public, but the list of soloists includes Mrs. Sybella Clayton Bassett, pianist, and Herman Seidell, violinist. Mrs. Bassett will play a Liszt number, while Mr. Seidell will give the Bruch Concerto in G minor. Mrs. John David Beall, soprano, will present a Puccini aria.

In addition there will be numbers by Ray Hastings, organist, Charles Barkdull, tenor, and Henry Page, baritone. Another feature will be the Marcel Meier Trio, which will present the celebrated Tschaikowsky trio.

The chorus and orchestra has been rehearsing for several months under Mr. Beall's direction. They will give a cantata by Theodore Dubois, and also one by Mr. Beall, the "Song of Solomon."

Seats have already been placed on sale at Clune's Auditorium for the event, which promises to draw an unusually large audience.

To Give California Dances.

The Los Angeles City and County Band will feature something out of the ordinary this afternoon at its concert at Exposition Park in the three old-time California Dances by Indard. These terpsichorean melodies were composed as early as 1847 by Donna Soledad Coronel de Indard, and lately arranged by her son, Francisco Coronel de Indard, for the band.

The first dance might be termed the one step of the old pueblo of Los Angeles, the second dance is the one that was used to wake up the chaperones in the wee sma' hours, while the third is the dance of parting.

The band's programme in full is as follows:

Choral ....Bach
Stars and Stripes Forever March..........Sousa
"Violets," waltz..........Waldteufel
Melody in F Paraphrase..........Rubinstein
American Fantasie..........Herbert

Murray, Bert Gilbert and Gretchen Hood.

John Drew follows "Sari" next week at the Mason in "Rosemary."

Burbank.

Marjorie Rambeau will return to the Burbank this afternoon in her greatest success, "Merely Mary Ann." So popular is Miss Rambeau with Los Angeles audiences that it is said the mere announcement of her return has been sufficient to send the box office records soaring.

Since Miss Rambeau was last seen in Los Angeles she has become a Broadway star.

Forrest Stanley will have the role of 'Launcelot,' a part which he played several times in the East with great success. Others will be Walter Catlett, Lillian Elliott, Louis Bennison, George Rand, Edmund Lowe, Winifred Bryson and Grace Travers.

Morosco.

Al Jolson, in his greatest Winter Garden success, "Dancing Around," will be the offering at the Morosco Theater during the week of June 14.

Jolson has made popular more comic songs than any dozen singers of our time, and it is said you haven't heard "Sister Susie's Sewing Shirts for Soldiers" until you listen to him sing it.

"Dancing Around" has been running for the past two seasons in New York and Chicago. It is said to be full of delicious song hits, spectacular dances and pretty girls.

Orpheum.

The biggest bill the Orpheum has housed this season is promised for this week. It will open tomorrow afternoon.

There are a number of headline acts, the chief ones being Lew Dockstader, Emma Carus and George Damerel, besides the holdover feature, Mason and Keeler, in their brilliant sketch, "Married."

Dockstader will be seen in what promises to be an amusing satire of the most strenuous of our ex-Presidents, entitled "My Policies." It is a good-natured burlesque.

Emma Carus, in an act which condenses some of her best musical comedy hits, promises much humor of the delightfully unctuous, and lively sort.

George Damarel of "Merry Widow" fame, comes in a soldier play with pretty girls, music and spectacular scenic effects. The music is said to be especially pleasing.

Others on the bill are Bert Leslie, the king of slang, in "Hogan in London;" Bryan Cheerbert's marvelous Mongolians in acrobatic stunts; Ideal, said to be the loveliest of all the champion lady swimmers, and Walter Shannon and Marie Annis in "A Shine Flirtation."

Empress.

"Ned Nestor and His Nine Sweethearts," featuring Betty Duval, is to be the headliner at the Empress this week, opening tomorrow. The act is said to be a riot of feminine beauty, gay costumes and new dances.

A second big feature will be the appearance of Mrs. Louis James in a playlet entitled "Holding a Husband." Mrs. James is the widow of the noted Shakespearean actor.

Others on the bill are Marguerite Farrell in a song revue; Merlin, magician; Leonard and Louis in piffle and stunts, and Vincent Miller in a musical offering.

Pantages.

This week's Pantages bill opening tomorrow promises several very attractive numbers.

Maude Leone returns in a one-act play by Willard Mack, entitled "Inside Stuff." It is a play of the underworld.

Others will be Ed F. Raynard, ventriloquist, in "A Morning in Hickville," in which Mr. Raynard speaks twenty parts; Napoleon, the chimpanzee, in stunts; Delton, Mareena and Delton, athletes; Rose Garden, eccentric pianist; Joe Roberts, banjoist, and Josie McIntyre and Bob Harty, musical comedy stars.

Hippodrome.

Comedy is the keynote of the "Hip" bill for this week. It will open tomorrow.

The big headliner will be the Howard-Fields Trio in "The Dining-car Minstrels," with two darky porters and a conductor, a real dining-car and a panorama of moving scenery.

Others will be the Musical Geralds; the Pia Trio, in song numbers; the Y Kishi Trio, Japanese acrobats and top spinners; Harold Bradbury & Co., in "Outwitted;" Lillian Colson, in "The Doublin Daisy," and "The Man in White," in a song, dance and patter act.

Republic.

Raymond Teal, one of the best-known and most popular of the old-time minstrels, will headline next week's Republic bill.

Florence Bell and Co. are to be retained, but will present a new playlet called "The Man."

George and Marie Brown are to bring a novelty act; Berg and Weston promise an extraordinary feature; the Fishers have a spectacular scenic act; Sam Golden has a line of comedy; Lydston and Emerson will present a singing and dancing turn; Flo and Ollie Walters have a similar act, and Montenegro, balladist, will bring some new songs.

Mission Play.

Harold Bell is to join the "Mission Play this afternoon, taking the important role of Corporal Hosea.

This is the eighteenth week of the "Mission Play" at San Gabriel this season. The attendance for the year has exceeded 150,000.

The pleasing work of George Osborne, Charles Edler, Arthur Allardt, Leonard Rowe, Lucretia del Valle and La Valeria is making the pageant drama more of a dramatic success than ever.

Bostock Jungle.

The latest feature added to the wonderful exhibition at Bostock's arena and jungle—the lion farm—is creating considerable interest in the visitors at this place of amusement. The three cubs, Wilson, Marshall and Bryan, are now allowed to roam about in the open, where they can be viewed by all, and Capt. Jack Bonavita, the world's greatest animal trainer, who has the cubs in charge, cheerfully explains to everyone just what he is doing with his trio of new friends.

The arena performances take place as usual, at 3 and 8 p.m., while the zoo is open daily from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. The animals are fed at 4:30 every afternoon. Free elephant rides afford pleasure to the children.

EDUCATORS.

Dr. Frank Johnson Goodnow, the new president of Johns Hopkins University, is the first president of Hopkins to lecture to the undergraduates, also the first one to wear soft collars and attend the Saturday afternoon athletic games. He is a leading authority on administrative law, and has an equally great reputation in the field of municipal administration. He was a member of President Taft's Commission on Economy and Efficiency, and was constitutional adviser to the Chinese republic.

Prof. Jay Brownell Davidson, who comes to the University of California to fill the new position of professor of agricultural engineering, is a specialist in the testing of agricultural machinery. He graduated from the University of Nebraska in 1904. There he was later instructor in farm mechanics. He was employed in the experimental department of Deere & Co., and afterwards by the International Harvester Company. For the past ten years he has been in charge of agricultural engineering at Iowa State College. He is the joint author with Prof. L. W. Chase of "Farm Machinery," a book used generally throughout the United States, and he is the author of a text-book for secondary schools entitled "Agricultural Engineering." Prof. Davidson has designed several pieces of agricultural engineering apparatus, including the Iowa integrating traction dynamometer.

Dr. Edward T. Hume, who has come to this country to procure a staff of professors of anatomy and pathology for the Hunan Yale Medical College at Changsha, China, has spent ten years in China in connection with the "Yale-in-China" movement. He is at the head of the college which he represents, it being one of the four institutions of this kind in China that enjoys support from the Rockefeller Foundation. The Hunan province, however, now practically supports it.

Hamlin E. Cogswell, director of the Normal Conservatory of Music and School of Fine Arts of the Indiana Normal School of Pennsylvania, has been appointed director of music for the public schools of Washington.

Dr. Frederick Haynes Newell, founder of the United States Reclamation Service, and for the last seven years its director, has just been appointed professor of civil engineering at the University of Illinois.

ARRANGE TO GIVE MUSIC PROGRAMME.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, May 29.—One of the main features of the commencement week at the University of Redlands, and one of the musical events of each season here, is the annual recital of the College of Fine Arts. It will be given on Saturday evening, June 12, and Dean Charles Edwards Hubach has announced the programme.

Miss Minnie McQuilkin of San Bernardino, will sing the aria, "Mimi's Farewell," from Puccini's "La Boheme," and a group of three songs, "Elegie" (Massenet,) "Vous Danzes Marquis" (Lemaire,) and "My Lover He Comes on the Skee" (Clough-Leiter.) Miss Ruth Ward of Upland will give the following piano numbers: "Romance in D Flat" (Sibelius,) Prelude in A Flat (Cui,) C Minor Etude (Chopin,) "Liebestraum, No. 3" (Liszt,) and "The Maiden's Wish" (Chopin-Liszt.)

Joshua Williams, Redlands basso, will give Vulcan's song from Gounod's "Philemon et Baucis." Miss Helen Wellman of Topeka, Kan., soprano, will sing "Whither" (Shubert,) and "To be Sung on the Water" (Schubert.)

Madeline Barnes Childs of Riverside, violinist, will play the Kreisler arrangement of Paganini's "Praeludium and Allegro." Miss Olive Hill of Highland, soprano, will sing "I Know that My Redeemer Liveth," from "The Messiah," by Handel.

Scheduled to draw many to the local motion-picture houses this week.

The first and second chapters of "The Goddess" will be shown all week, with Anita Stewart and Earle Williams as the stars.

Comedy.

"The Goddess," the beautiful serial picture featuring Earle Williams and Anita Stewart, will be the attraction at the Comedy Theater, on Broadway near Sixth street, beginning tomorrow morning. The picture will be shown every forty-five minutes. A new chapter will begin every Monday. There are fifteen in all, and it is said that the photoplay is a wonderful portrayal of the possible future results of a world war, such as the present European conflict, and its effects on economic, financial and social conditions.

SOLDIERS FIGHT WILD ANIMALS.

A Steamship Turns Loose a Cargo of Jungle Animals in the Gulf of Aden Rather than Feed Them.

[New York Sun:] An account of the battle in the streets of Aden between British soldiers and a shipload of wild beasts is contained in a letter from a Brazilian to Alvaro D'Almeida, of the Portuguese Consulate here.

A German freight steamer laden with animals from the jungle for the Zoological Garden of Hamburg was captured by the British in the Gulf of Aden. Her captain found himself in the awkward position of having to feed a cargo of wild beasts.

Food being high, the German hit upon a way of getting rid of his unwelcome charges. He had the cages moved to the rail of his decks, broke the cages open and pushed the animals into the bay. Many lions and tigers reached shore and rushed through Aden. The inhabitants fled to their houses and locked themselves in. Crocodiles roaming the streets completed the panic.

A squad of British soldiers was ordered out to hunt down the animals. The screams of the inhabitants, mingling with the roars of the furious beasts and the shots of the British marksmen, made a conglomeration of sound not soon to be forgotten. The animals were all slaughtered. During the excitement the German captain slipped out of the harbor.

Music.

Work on Harmony.

It is not often that a work on the theoretic side of music comes from a local pen. In her "Applied Harmony" Carolyn A. Alchin presents a book which aims at the practical side of things in a very clear-cut fashion.

She lays particular stress at the very outset on the relationship of melodies and chords to rhythm. "Rhythm is a vital factor in the selection of harmonies," she says in her "foreword."

She also would make the study of harmony more interesting by centering it around melodic ideas, instead of the principles of thorough base. "Exercises in the given base," she says, "owing to their arbitrary prescription of the order and arrangement of material, completely cut off the student from that independence of thought and judgment in the use and selection of chord material which is so essential to its mastery. Given a melody to harmonize the student sets out with the one thing he can mentally grasp; he perfectly comprehends the subject of his work and therefore also its object. Having a tangible subject, he has a tangible object; his melody is his preceptor and guide in his choice of harmonies."

In the course of the work great stress is also laid by the writer on the magnetism of tones for one another.

Numerous musical examples from the works of composers, classic and modern, are given.

Beverly Programme.

Grace Wood Jess, mezzo soprano, will give a programme tonight at Beverly Hills Hotel, assisted by Mr. Glenn Knight, accompanist, and the Beverly trio, composed of Vernon Gray, violinist; Mr. Emery McCarger, violoncellist, and Mr. Knight, pianist.

Mrs. Jess will sing a group of children's songs, including "The Busy Child" (Grace Wassals,) Soldatenlied" (Tanbert,) "Aunt Seely" (Horace Clark,) and "The Shadow March" (Del Riego,) as well as a group containing "I Once Loved a Boy" (Needham,) "The Dove," Tuscany folk song, (Schlindler,) "The Chinese Girl's Prayer" (Garnett,) and "The Open Secret" (Woodman.)

MUSIC NOTES.

A song recital will be given by Kathryn Barnard, soprano, June 10 in the ballroom of the Hotel Alexandria. She will be assisted by the Adolf Tandler string quartette, William Bassett, baritone, and Sybella Clayton Bassett, accompanist. The programme will be announced later.

Mrs. Louise Waite of Chicago, composer of "Seven Songs of Childhood," is a visitor in this city. She is residing at No. 4575 Finley avenue.

The commencement concert of the college of music of the University of Southern California will take place on the evening of June 8 in the First Methodist Church, Sixth and Hill streets.

Jane Catherwood will give her last musicale for this season tomorrow evening at the Fowler apartments. The artists will be Miss Fannie Dillon, Mrs. Emma Porter Makinson and Frieda Peycke. Miss Dillon will play a set of new variations, and Mrs. Makinson will sing the four songs by Miss Dillon that were recently accepted by Mme. Schumann-Heink.

Some twenty-five concerts in all have been given this year by the University of Southern California Glee Club, under the direction of Horatio Cogswell. Their season ended with appearances at Rialto and Redlands. The territory covered extended as far north as Fresno. The Club also spent a few days at the fair.

Two classes of prizes will be given by the composers' creative department of the Matinee Musical Club in the future, according to Miss Fannie Dillon, curator of this section. Not only will there be a prize for semi-professional competitors, as in the case of the recent contest, but there will also be one for professional musicians. Only semi-professional musicians were represented in the recent contest, and of the composers represented on last Thursday evening's programme only Mrs. M. L. Botsford and Mr. James W. Pierce took part in the contest.

SCIENTISTS.

Thomas A. Edison and Dr. Heike Kamerlingh Onnes, the Dutch scientist, have been awarded gold medals by the Franklin Institute. The medals were provided by Samuel Insull of Chicago.

Dr. Nathanial Lord Britton, director-in-general of the New York Botanical Garden since 1896, has returned from a trip to Porto Rica, which was fraught with valuable results. The work was a continuation of the scientific survey of the island undertaken by the New York Academy of Sciences, in co-operation with the insular government, the American Museum of Natural History and other institutions. Parts of the island which scientists had not previously explored were visited, where more than 8000 specimens, represented by 1925 field numbers, were collected. Many duplicates of rare or otherwise interesting species were obtained for use in exchanges with other gardens and museums.

Dr. Charles C. Abbot, director of the astro-physical observatory of the Smithsonian Institution, has just been awarded the Rumford medal by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences for his researches in solar radiation. Dr. Abbot is said to have measured the amount of heat emitted by the sun and to have proved its variability.

George K. Cherrie, naturalist of the American Museum of Natural History, has returned from an exploration of unknown parts of South American jungles.

The Bright Side of Sunshine Land—People and Their Doings—a Hundred Happy Affair

A DEBUTANTE'S LETTER.

LOS ANGELES, May 28.

Jack, darling: Would you feel a little quiver of pain if I told you I was engaged? You'd want me to confide in you, wouldn't you, so that you could experience that sense of poignant wistfulness, then pull yourself together with a brave smile and write and tell me how happy you hope I will be! Oh, you wicked old bachelor, I know all your fancy tricks. You have done just that thing for every girl you know who ever got engaged to someone else, but you are an adept at hiding those tender emotions until it's "too late;" you must be cherishing at least five wistful and interesting separate heartaches, to my certain knowledge.

So I don't think I will confide in you now, because I hardly think you have earned a new sweet heartache yet, you old sinner.

All the same the Dean Masons did give the loveliest moonlight dinner party for Daphne and Sayre, with soft Venetian love songs wandering through the garden, voiced by some ethereal sirens who did not seem quite real. And, as you know, positively anything might happen at a moonlight dinner party—the moon is so kind to our charms and even the stickiest male acquires a veneer of romance, if he wears his clothes nicely.

I know, because the night before that the Trehernes had the duckiest moonlight supper party down at Balboa, just a nicely-chosen collection of sympatique souls. A very prosaic young man fell to my lot, but I never realized he was prosaic until I played golf with him next morning and he got too hot and damp looking, and fussed over a 50-cent lost ball. The Trehernes had five launches and we all cruised about the bay, dangling our hands in the water and singing old-fashioned love songs. Bog sang "The Songs of Araby" with such tender verve that he successfully charmed most of us to a tear and cheated us of a sigh. But it did not prevent us all eating a mighty supper when we got back, and according Mrs. T.'s new punch an epicurean welcome.

Which reminds me. Poor Marie is expecting eastern friends from Ohio today, some highly-virtuous, nonsmoking, teetotal nabobs, who are very important to her husband back in Dayton. So when we called upon her we found her embalmed in a huge apron, searching all the cupboards for bottles, playing cards, cigarette boxes, all of which had positively to be buried before the arrivals. They are going to stay two weeks and Marie has been posting herself on the recent Methodist convention, because they are earnest Methodists and Marie is understood to be the same. She wears a puckered brow and has begged us to see her through.

The Raparrees gave amateur theatricals on Tuesday and really did themselves pretty well. They certainly had a crowded audience, which included F. Q. Story and Miss Margaret James, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert J. Goudge, the Burnses, the Stanley Woods, and all the rest of that set. Pat Thornton, as the noble friend of the husband, whose wife he loved passionately but hopelessly, made a decided hit and Mrs. Ross Hickox, as said wife, in a fascinating kimono, looking more like Madame Clara Butt than ever, showed herself distinctly an actress. Those amateur things are good fun and most every set here has its amateur dramatic coterie now.

Helen Mathewson is entertaining the Van Ettens from New York. He was president of the New York Central, you know, and there is always something deliciously superior about railroad magnates, isn't there?

The Haggartys also had a moonlight garden party on Monday—I tell you we are making the most of our moon just now, heaven knows we needed it—their lovely gardens, with their tropical charm, were delightful. It was a surprise for Marie's papa, who enjoyed the unique sensation for a father of being the guest of honor in his own house.

And tonight we are all bundling off down to Santa Monica, where the tennis club is giving a dance at the Sunset Inn and people by the carload are coming down from Riverside and Redlands for it, too.

The Los Angeles Country Club likewise had a dinner party, or rather dozens of them, and the amateur players gave a very clever little play, in which your prosperous-looking friend, Norwood Howard, played the part of a knowing detective. I think a plump detective is a pleasant innovation, one gets so tired of the skinny kind. Henry Daly, who really is an actor who could command a professional salary, and Dr. Cornish, were both in it, and your friend, Mrs. Du-Pont-Joyce made no end of a hit in some oriental impersonations, and all the nabobs gave dinner parties, and all the prettiest debutantes seemed assembled at the table presided over by Virginia and Katherine.

The Cosmo Morgans are entertaining monsieur's mamma and papa from San Francisco and are blossoming with parties in their honor, and Ada and Florence, the two brides-elect, are the complimented guests of all sorts of nice friends, notably the Powers who gave them a stunning party on Tuesday afternoon. It was a sly party really, for they announced Mildred Powers's engagement to Edwin Spates in the middle of it, and embryo brides bloomed on all sides.

This June bride business, coming with such persistent annuality, is apt to be very disturbing to nous autres. We can't help feeling what really charming brides we should make ourselves—if we could only make up our minds to accept the safe, reliable, parent-approved young man, instead of waiting indefinitely for our ideal Prince Charming. Are there any ideal Prince Charmings left, Jack, dear?

You'll be interested to hear how the shooting matches came out at the Los Angeles Country Club on their new rifle range. They challenged the Middicans, you know. The range is near the thirteenth green on the golf course, and you would laugh to see serious-minded painstaking golfers jump irritably as the rifles pop just as they are about to make a long-studied putt. Los Angeles won that time and the golfers are giggling, for Midwick can't seem to hole a bull's eye any better than it holes a putt. They are waiting until some careless, insouciant rifler, nonchalantly swinging his gun, plugs a hole into somebody's ear, then they will arise in their majesty and petition for this dangerous sport to be eliminated on the grounds of safety first—not, you will understand, because it disturbs putting.

Maude Adams had a fine first night for "Quality Street," but she looks awfully done up. Doubtless the Lusitania horror. Most of our elect were there.

Well, old man, I must be off to dress for the dance. Do hope there will be plenty of nice men—even if they are not all they are cracked up to be, there is no denying they do make a difference.

Your affectionate,
BETTY.

THE WEEK.

PARTIES, RECEPTIONS, DINNERS, WEDDINGS AND THE LIKE.

With her dainty fascination, irresistible Maude Adams lured with impelling, true "Pipes of Pan" call one of the most aristocratic, handsomely-gowned assemblages of the city's social elect and literati at the Mason on Monday night that has graced a first night in many seasons.

So impelling is this little sprite that we would take her to our hearts in any case, but her return to us in a revival of delightful "Quality Street"—that was quite enough to overflow the theater, and it did.

So much lovelier is she in plain, workaday school clothes, with her saucy curls tucked away 'neath her cap, than in the proud plumage which attired her as Chantecler.

In the vast audience were noted the Hugo R. Johnstones of Pasadena, who entertained eight in a pretty box party; the James Taber Fitzgeralds, William Tremaine Wyatts, Judge and Mrs. Leon F. Moss, Mrs. Hugh Livingstone Macneil and a party of young folk; Dr. and Mrs. Guy Cochrane, the Robert Farquhars, Joseph Francis Sartoris, Miss Juliet Boileau, Mrs. W. T. McFie, the Willis H. Booths, the Orra E. Monnettes, Mr. and Mrs. Marco Hellman, Mr and Mrs. Alvin Frank, and ever so many others.

Really, Los Angeles' blue book was represented in the brilliant personnel.

Miss Adams, by the way, is a very dear friend of the C. O. Whittemores of No. 249 Kingsley drive, Mr. Whittemore having known her people many years. The Whittemores always extend to her intimately gracious hospitality, and would have been so eager to do real, worth-while things socially for the gifted little lady during her brief stay with us, but her deep grief over the loss of the one dramatist whose understanding of her and her art carried her over so many difficult paths—Charles Frohman, who passed with the destroying of the Lusitania—caused her to forego all offers of entertainment.

You will remember that it was rumored Frohman and Miss Adams were wed, and one was constantly hearing of their betrothal.

Malibu Picnic Supper.

Most propitious has been this ideal summertide, with sea-breezy days melting softly into liquid, silvery moonlight, for picnics al fresco and dinners of more elaborateness (and here one instinctively recalls that wondrous Dean Mason affair) have been quite the "un success furieux" with society devotees.

Friday night a congenial party of the younger set motored down beyond old Santa Monica Canyon to Malibu, and made merry over a grilled picnic supper on the beach. Stunning Katherine Johnson that was—now Mrs. William Robert Munroe—and her lieutenant husband furnished the motif for the jaunt, others being Miss Alice Elliott, Miss Charline Coulter, Misses Gertrude and Madeline King, Robert Elliott, Robert Harrington and Roger Topp.

Congenial Spirits at the Crags.

The rustic beauties abounding at The Crags Country Club formed a rendezvous for a large number of ladies who motored out on Tuesday to accept the lavish hospitality of Mrs. William T. Bishop for a luncheon, and the afternoon spent in any manner best liked by the guests—swimming or auction or just plain visiting. The pretty luncheon tables were decked in wild flora. Mrs. Robert Hasse of St. Paul, who has been the attractive house guest of the Jack Fosters for some time, was honoree. Bidden were Mrs. Fred Flint, Mrs. Harry Lombard and her house guest, Mrs. Cole; Mrs. Paul Grimm, Mrs. Frank Thomas, Mrs. Seavers, Mrs. Ozra W. Childs, Mrs. George Beveridge, Mrs. Frank Griffith, Mrs Murray Innes, guest of Mrs. Beveridge; Mrs. Richard Bishop, Mrs. Nathaniel Myrick, Mrs. F. Irwin Herron, Mrs. Jack Foster, Miss Lucas, Mrs. Henry S. McKee, Mrs. Frank Case, Mrs. Willard J Doran.

All forms of delightful entertainment have been provided for Mrs. Hasse during her exceedingly pleasant stay, the John D. Fosters, Silents, Harry Turners, E. H. Seavers, Lombards and others having contributed some happy affairs.

That Mason Affair.

Moonlight was capitalized into bewitching beauty for the unique dinner which the Dean Masons of No. 340 Andrews boulevard gave on Thursday night, in compliment to Miss Daphne Drake and her affianced, Sayre Macneil.

For the long board was laid on the spacious porch, with quantities of red Lawsons forming a veritable floral bed down its entire length, veiled in red tulle, which fell in careless grace in gorgeous bows or lover's knots. A soft glow was shed from innumerable tapers in scintillating holders of crystal—the sole illumination save the lunar rays.

A Venetian quartette strolled leisurely through the beautiful garden singing favorite love ballads or playing dulcet serenades, while an orchestra was in attendance for the dance which followed in the music-room, just off the porch.

Mrs. James Calhoun Drake and Mrs. Hugh Livingstone Macneil assisted, augmented by Mrs. H. W. R. Strong, Mrs. Randolph Huntington Miner, Mrs. George J. Dennis and Mrs. Granville MacGowan.

The affair quite eclipsed all former originality displayed by the hostess, which indeed is saying much, for her reputation as an entertainer is proverbial.

Two Affairs of the Week.

Mrs. Franklin Howard Nichols, No. 977 Menlo avenue, entertained at two beautifully appointed bridge luncheons on Thursday and Friday afternoons, each attended by sixty guests. Spring baskets of garden flowers with their riot of color—cornflowers, coreopsis, double daisies, bachelor's buttons, gladioli—interspersed with delicate Gypsophila and maidenhair fern, adorned the pretty tables, laid with lace. Monogrammed cards marked covers.

Girls Home from School.

Two lovely young girls just home from school were given a charming welcome by Miss Agnes Wickfield Britt at her home, No. 2141 West Adams street, Friday afternoon—the Misses Dorothea Whitnah, who returned Monday from Dana Hall, Mass., and Cecil Call, who arrived Tuesday from Miss Ranson's finishing school for girls in Piedmont. Eighteen of the young set enjoyed the affair, which was informal.

For Lieut. and Mrs. Munroe.

Lieut. William Robert and Mrs. Munroe, who have returned from their extensive honeymoon trip East and South, are to be complimented by Miss Gertrude Hanna with a much-anticipated dinner dance Saturday evening.

Two Dinner Companies.

Mrs. C. W. Hinchcliffe of No. 1327 Crenshaw boulevard, who always entertains handsomely, contributed two informal dinner companies to the week's calendar on Tuesday and Friday evenings. At both affairs an effective yellow motif was carried out with true artistry, and elaborate menus faultlessly served.

Tiny Queen of Babyhood.

Unusually honored is wee Miss Elizabeth Morton, 3-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Statley Morton, for her budding attractions are bringing an admirer 4000 miles for the single purpose of calling upon her. This special guest is the young lady's maternal grandmother, Mrs. Julia Brigham, a wealthy Philadelphian, who for the past three or four years has been residing on her orange groves in Cuba. Mrs. Brigham became acquainted with Miss Elizabeth on the occasion of the latter's birth, but has not since seen her.

Since removing from their former home in Pasadena to the Bryson, Mr. and Mrs. Morton have contributed a number of notable items to the city's social calendar. On Tuesday evening last they entertained with a dinner party at the Bryson in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Nickels of Minneapolis, two of the prominent figures in the northern Baptist convention, their young son and the mother of Mrs. Nickels.

Off to San Diego.

The Thomas J. Flemings, Miss Marguerite and Miss Louise Fleming and their house guests, Miss Edith Small, who arrived Tuesday from Battle Creek, Mich., and Mrs. S. T. Lyne and Miss Felice Lyne of London, formed a merry motoring party to San Diego Friday for the week end. They will return here tomorrow.

Honoring Mrs. Churchill.

In compliment to Mrs. Owen Humphreys Churchill, who has just returned from the north, where she visited the exposition and her son Owen, Miss White of The Palms is to entertain at a bridge tea on Wednesday.

Mrs. Kennedy Hostess.

At her home on No. 616 Serrano avenue, Mrs. William Howe Kennedy gave a beautiful bride's luncheon in white and green on Wednesday in honor of Miss Ada May Forbes, who is to be married shortly. The guests were seated by bride cards at a table covered in lace of cobwebby fineness, centered in a mound of white sweet peas, carnations and delicate feathery gypsophila, resting on a base of maidenhair ferns. White tapers burned in crystal holders. The predominating tones—green and white—were carried out throughout the serving of the delicious menu. Bridge was played later.

The Kennedys are entertaining informally at tea this afternoon for Mrs. Craig McClure and her beautiful young daughter, Miss Fanny, who are leaving within a few days for Glen Ridge, N. J., to reside, after a two-year residence in Southern California. Mr. McClure has already gone on to have things in readiness for their arrival.

Miss McClure especially has been a very prominent society girl in not only her Pasadena home, but Los Angeles as well, and will be sorely missed. another choice bit of news Cupid has been suppressing long time: Miss Ruth Wood second daughter of Dr. and Charles Edward Locke of Beren- is to become a bride. Her engagement was announced yesterday at one of the season's daintiest luncheons, and the Frenchy favors on which appeared her name were inscribed also with that of Dr. William Ben Thompson of South Pasadena, son of Mrs. T. L. Thompson.

To Mrs. Fletcher White, eldest sister of the bride-to-be and Miss Flora Cronemiller, fell the pleasant task of giving the announcement luncheon, twenty-five guests gathering at the Los Angeles Country Club to be genuinely surprised when the interesting news was made known.

Miss Locke is a graduate of U.S.C. and has just finished her post-graduate course at Stanford, where she announced her engagement secretly before leaving to the members of her sorority, the Kappa Alpha Theta. Dr. Thompson is also a graduate of U.S.C., as well as of Berkeley. The wedding will take place next spring.

The luncheon was a charming affair, the guests seated at a large round banquet table, with a unique center piece—a handsome cage enclosing two white doves (divulging the secret) topped with a huge pink maline bow, and resting in a bed of maidenhair and Cecile Brunner buds. Covers were laid for Mrs. White, Miss Cronemiller, Miss Locke, Miss Margaret Locke, Mrs. Thomas Lovnhan, Mrs. John McCarty, Mrs. Walter Bowie, Mrs. Bryant Mathews, Mrs. John Way, Mrs. Karl Klitten, Mrs. Walter Butler, Mrs. Monroe Montgomery, Mrs. Edgar Wall, Miss Helen Bullard, Miss Frances Graham, Mis Mary Parker, Miss Lucille Zander, Miss Mary Craig, Miss Jane Thompson, Miss Gladys Bridges, Miss Katherine Adkinson, Miss Inez Johnston, Miss Florence Parmelee, Miss Frances St. John, Miss Ruth Elliott, Miss Ethel McCoy and Miss Margaret Hanna. A musical programme followed the luncheon, to which Mrs. T. L. Thompson, Mrs. Charles Edward Locke, Mrs. W. S. Cronemiller and Mrs. C. A. Parmelee were also included.

For Eastern Guest.

Mrs. J. F. Conroy, assisted by her daughters, Mrs. Bri Kelley and Mrs. Reginald Lloyd Jones, gave a delightful bridge luncheon not long ago, at the beautiful ranch of the former in Lankershim. The affair honored Mrs. Hays of Michigan, the house guest of Mrs. Jack Foster. Those asked to meet Mrs. Hays included Mrs. Willie Childs, Mrs. Cheney, Mrs. Alexander J. Mitchell, Mrs. Jack Foster, Mrs. Herman Janss, Mrs. Harry Chandler, Mrs. Montgomery, Mrs. Walter Story, Mrs. Lombard, Mrs. W. W. Mines, Mrs. Sharp, Mrs. Seeber, Mrs. Jack Nevins, Mrs. Thomas, Miss Louise Burke and Miss Mellus.

Thursday Dr. Hughes was the inspiration for a stag yachting party on the Yankee Girl, given by the commodore, Catalina Island being their destination, where they are spending the week-end.

To Santa Barbara.

Over 200 members of the Sierra Madre Club with their families and friends left yesterday morning on the Sierra Madre special train de-luxe for their annual outing at Hotel Potter, returning tomorrow afternoon. Taking with them their own orchestra, dancing and cards were enjoyed en route, these innovations hastening the flight of time between the two cities. A dinner dance in the ball-room of Hotel Potter was the diversion last evening.

The Potter Country Club stages a golf tournament to be played this and tomorrow mornings, handsome cups to be played for from scratch and also with handicap. Boating, fishing, sea bathing and side trips to Montecito and to the famous mission will furnish further enjoyment for every spare moment.

Bridge Luncheon.

The Westlake Auction Bridge Club and special guests were the inspiration for an enjoyable bridge luncheon given Thursday afternoon at the Alexandria, presided over by Mrs. J. W. Summerfield. Gold monogramed cards marked covers for fifty guests. Mrs. Summerfield asked to assist her Mrs. George H. Rector, Mrs. E. J. Brent, Mrs. Ralph Hagan and Mrs. Frank Jay.

Will Motor North.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard E. Huntington have planned a delightful motoring trip to San Francisco, where they will pick up Mr. Huntington's mother and tour through beautiful Yosemite. They are to be gone a fortnight.

From Yucatan.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Q. Stanton, No. 448 Andrews boulevard, are enjoying a house guest, Mrs. William M. James of Marida, Yucatan, who has arrived for a visit of generous length.

Mrs. Wailes's Luncheon.

Mrs. Sydney I. Wailes of No. 1363 West Adams presided over a pretty luncheon of eight covers on Friday, which was delightfully informal. It was followed by an afternoon at auction.

For Charity.

Brownson House Settlement Association, one of the oldest organizations in the city, is waging a campaign for $4000 for the maintenance of the institution during the coming year.

The fourth day in the efforts finished Thursday with a gusto. Mrs. Arnold Burkelman and her assistants held forth at the headquarters during the day, and received interested callers and checks.

Mrs. A. J. Aicher of Hollywood was captain Friday, assisted by Miss Anna Callaghan, Mrs. George Sheehy, Mrs. F. K. Paul, Mrs. A. L. Wilkie, Miss Gertrude Aicher and Miss Lillian Nolan.

They realized a handsome sum to add to the treasury.

Checks have been received from Needles, Covina, San Gabriel, Glendora, San Diego, Van Nuys, Flagstaff, Ariz. The bulk of the money will come from personal friends of the Brownson House workers in this city. The campaign closes June 5.

Help the babies, help the children, help the society by sending in good fat checks to the Brownson House campaign headquarters at 908 Auditorium Building, telephone F5266, and receive the gratitude of the sixty prominent club and society women who give their services to the work the year around, is the appeal that is being much heeded.

Notable Woman Here.

Mrs. Alma V. Lafferty of Denver is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Lewis P. Abell of Glendale. Mrs. Lafferty is well known in the city, and is one of the prominent women in Colorado in club and political life. She has served in three sessions of the State Legislature and has really a national reputation, being president of the Woman's Peace Association of Colorado, through whose efforts the Federal troops were brought into the southern coal fields during the strike and peace established there. Mrs. Lafferty expects to visit both expositions before leaving for her home. She is invited to speak at the international peace conference to be held in San Diego in June.

Here and There.

The Justices and Herman Hausens motored to San Diego Saturday and will spend the week at the Coronado.

A. T. Shannon and Miss Shannon of Philadelphia have joined their friends, Mr. and Mrs. John M. Walker of New York City, who are making their home at Beverly Hills.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Brent and the Biedlers are to go to San Diego the latter part of the week to view the exposition.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Levy, who have been at Arrowhead for several days, were joined by their friend, S. O. Nash, Friday, and the trio will remain there over the week-end.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Tufts are at Beverly Hills for the summer.

Three charming travelers at the Clark are the Misses Gertrude, Minnie and Marjorie Bunger of Denver. The sisters are on a pleasure trip along the Coast.

For Mrs. Morgan.

Twelve ladies enjoyed the hospitality proferred by Mrs. Cosmo Morgan, Jr., of No. 2244 West Twenty-fourth street on Friday, the pretty function complimenting Mrs. Cosmo George Morgan of San Francisco.

Mrs. Morgan has planned an informal tea for early this week, and many other friends of the charming visitor have expressed a wish to entertain for her, so undoubtedly her stay will be the motif for a continuation of social gaiety.

To Entertain at Dinner.

Mrs. Eugene W. Britt of No. 2141 West Adams street will be a dinner hostess on Tuesday evening.

Dinner Dance.

The dinner dance of enjoyable informality given by Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Seeley, No. 1415 Burlington street, Thursday evening, was a farewell courtesy extended to Mr. and Mrs. A. B. McGaffey, who will spend the summer in New Mexico, and to Mrs. Cora Freeman, who will leave July 1 for the East. Covers were placed for twenty-six guests.

For Sixty Ladies.

Mrs. Turner Elmer Weatherholt of No. 914 Alvarado street will on Tuesday afternoon entertain sixty ladies at a bridge tea.

Informally Received.

The Hugh F. Stewart home, out Alhambra way, was the objective point for a few society matrons who motored out on Tuesday to take luncheon with Mrs. Stewart and enjoy a game of auction. There was no pretense of entertaining, though the luncheon table was exceedingly beautiful with its garden flowers and imported cover.

For Two Easterners.

Mrs. Walter Ferrier and Miss Jennie Coulter of Chicago were entertained at luncheon by Mrs. Charles Walker Williams at the Alexandria on Wednesday.

Mrs. Laughlin's Luncheon.

A pretty courtesy was extended Mrs. William David Barnard of Philadelphia, who is the house guest of Miss Gwendolen Laughlin, on Friday, when Mrs. Homer Laughlin, Jr., entertained eighty guests at luncheon at the California Club.

For Brides-elect.

Miss Mildred Power, Mrs. J. Clyde Power and Mrs. Harold L. Power extended to Miss Ada May Forbes and Miss Florence Crocker a delightful pre-nuptial compliment Tuesday afternoon, entertaining with a luncheon. A decidedly unlooked-for happening occurred in the announcement of Miss Power's engagement to Dr. Edwin M. Spates, cleverly made known by little pink birds holding in their beaks tiny cards—perched saucily on the long-stemmed ice cream glasses. The interior of the home was converted into a rose garden of pink, great sprays of the flowering boughs forming a fit background for the prettily-gowned ladies. Mrs. C. H. Potter, Mrs. Cecil J. Gardner, Mrs. L. J. Hathaway and Miss Helen Updegraff assisted. Others enjoying the afternoon were Mmes. Clyde Marten, J. H. Johnston, H. Louis, H. W. Out-of-Town Society

Pasadena.

INDICATIONS are that "Dan Cupid" will be about the busiest body in Crown City social circles during the month of June, the majority of parties given during the past week having been for the most part in compliment to various brides-to-be, and it is expected that several other engagements will be announced in the very near future. Misses Ruth White and Margaret Thompson, two brides of the near future, who are to marry Roy Messler and Edwin Le Roy Ghois, respectively, were the interesting motifs recently for a charming miscellaneous shower given by Mmes. Henry L. Musick and C. Elvin Musick. The reception suite was a bower of roses. In the dining-room, Mme. Caroline Testouts were used in lavish profusion, while Ameri-

HOW I DARKENED MY GRAY HAIR

Lady Gives Simple Home Recipe That She Used to Darken Her Gray Hair.

For years I tried to restore my gray hair to its natural color with the prepared dyes and stains, but none of them gave satisfaction and they were all expensive. I finally ran onto a simple recipe which I mixed at home that gives wonderful results. I gave the recipe, which is as follows, to a number of my friends, and they are all delighted with it. To 7 ozs. of water add a small box of Barbo Compound, 1 oz. of bay rum and ¼ oz. of glycerine. These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost. Use every other day until the hair becomes the required shade, then every two weeks. It will not only darken the gray hair, but removes dandruff and scalp humors, and acts as a tonic to the hair. It is not sticky or greasy, does not rub off and does not color the scalp.

We Are Painless Dentists

And yet there are people who go to their dentist, wait in an agony of apprehension for their call to his chair and sit in justified fear and trembling while he probes and grinds and cleans and scours and hurts, hurts. HURTS! Simply because they have not been made to appreciate to the full how absolutely unnecessary is any pain. Yale Dentists, 444 South Broadway, Third Floor, Parmalee-Dohrman Building.

can Beauties did honor in the other rooms. In the midst of merry chatter a messenger brought telegrams to the honorees, telling them to go to the bath-house and peep into certain nooks, where they found flower-decked, tulle-tied baskets heaped high with useful gifts. The guests also participated to the extent that they were asked to guess what the parcels contained. The prize for this—a kewpie dressed as a bride with a satin gown and tulle veil—was captured by Miss Carrie Frost. Tea was served, Mrs. Ella S. F. Turner pouring. The guests included Misses Ruth and Marion White, Margaret Thompson, Helen Sutliff, Ellen Eason, Carrie Frost, Terwilliger, Gertrude Machin, Mmes. E. White, C. S. Thompson, V. R. Sutliff, Willis S. Eason, Fred Langley, Emerick Barzen, Hartwell Miller, Dorothy B. Johnston, Ella S. F. Turner, MacD. Snowball, H. L. and C. Elvin Musick.

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Alice Frances Gage, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Cage of No. 603 Prescott street, and Dr. Warren Fox, which was made at a thimble party Tuesday afternoon, was received with even more than ordinary interest by a large circle of friends, none of them having the least inkling of the pretty secret. As the guests were busily engaged in their "stitchery" a cat was let out of a bag and with it came the secret. A color scheme of pink and white was carried out in both decorations and refreshments, roses and sweet peas being employed in dressing up the house. Dr. Fox, who is the son of Dr. and Mrs. J. J. Fox of Sunset avenue, is assistant surgeon in the United States public health service and is stationed at the Marine Hospital in San Francisco. The guests included Misses Gertrude Rettig, Ruth Pitts, Isabella Sturdevant, Mildred Glidden, Ethel Hoard, Priscilla Putnam, Dorothy Pool, Elsie Aligor, Ethel Fox, Ruth McConnell, Evelyn Foss, Marian Fox, Mmes. George Gage, John McLuckie, Walter Frost, Herbert Gage, H. S. Kinney and J. J. Fox.

Pink roses were used throughout the rooms and the pink color motif was carried out in all the appointments. Those enjoying the hospitality were Mmes. Clarence Fry, Earl Waite, Jack, Virginia Bamber, Fletcher Howard, Jean Slaughter, Charles Brown, Curtis Albro and Misses Margaret and Catherine Hall and Helen Ward.

A charming, but informal dance, was enjoyed at the Altadena Country Club recently. The rooms were arrayed in spring blossoms. The party included Messrs. and Mmes. F. S. Churchill, A. Stephen Vavra, J. B. Coulston, M. W. Hamilton, J. M. Harper, Joseph Caunt, Voorhees, Leo. G. MacLaughlin, E. M. Murray, E. L. Martin, Messrs. E. D. Neff and John Coulston, Jr.

Miss Nellie May Bailey of No. 769 North Orange Grove avenue, who is to be married to Arthur Young on June 11, was hostess at an "Auld Lang Syne" luncheon given as a courtesy to her classmates at Occidental College. This was in keeping with a pretty custom established years ago. Every girl graduate tenders a farewell luncheon to her classmates preceding her marriage. The guests were seated around a long table which was lovely in its dress of Cecile Brunner roses. Pictures of the prospective bride and bridegroom enclosed in pink envelopes were the favors. They were distributed by tiny Alice Mary Johnson, daughter of the bride-elect's room-mate at college. Little Miss Johnson has also been chosen as flower girl at the June wedding. The out-of-town guests included Mmes. Edwin Robinson, Cherry Johnson, G. MacDougall, Misses Marjorie Foote, Harriet Gage, Ruth Foote, Verona Trowbridge, Luella Rice, Christine Highstreet of Los Angeles, Miss Edna Leighton of Long Beach, Mrs. Clarence Gustlin of Santa Ana, and Messrs. Dorothy Van Gleck, Elizabeth Davis and Mary Alice Johnson of Pasadena.

One of the largest and most beautifully appointed functions of the week was the card party given at the Altadena Country Club last Tuesday evening. Throughout the rooms masses of roses were used in profusion, lending their color and sweet perfume with most pleasing effect. Preceding the card playing, numerous dinner parties were given. Some of those entertaining as many as eight guests, included Gen. and Mrs. James Montgomery Bell, Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Lill, Mr. and Mrs. Harper, Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Hamilton. Beneath the mulberry trees, for which their home is famous, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Giddings of East Colorado street, entertained with a large reception last Monday afternoon as a compliment to Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Arthur Newcomb, Sarah Adams, Alfred Eggleston, Fred Newcomb, Sidney Parson, Amy Johnson, Morris Johnson, Eggleston, Marvin Ledford, Harry Parsons, and S. Parsons.

HONORING her daughter, Miss Marie Ward, Mrs. Harold Ward of Grape street entertained Friday evening with a punch dansant which was prettily appointed. Roses in abundance, with Cecile Brunner predominating, lent their fragrance and beauty to the rooms. John Porter of Los Angeles assisted the hostess at the punch bowl. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Earl Benson, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Ammerman, Miss Amy Virges, Miss Edna Clark, Miss Isabelle Alexander, Lee Wayne, John Porter, Harold Sueforth, John Roberts and Kenneth Kirby.

A pretty social affair of recent date was the Ulrich Brunner luncheon given by Mrs. W. E. Marmaduke, when her home in Fir street was prettily decorated with roses galore, attractively combined with ferns and potted plants. The guest of honor was Mrs. John Otercranse of Denver, with Mrs. William Turner, Mrs. Charles Lundall and Mrs. C. Johnson of Los Angeles, and Mrs. Alfred Johnson of Spaulding invited to meet her and to share the hospitality of Mrs. Marmaduke.

Complimentary to Mr. and Mrs. Mathew Cotton of Indianapolis, Ind., who left Sunday for their eastern home, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Justus entertained Friday with a 1 o'clock luncheon at their lovely home, No. 1841 Greenwood avenue. A low mound of La France buds centered the table, with a bud marking the covers for the host, hostess and honorees. The afternoon was spent with the Unity Circle at Mrs. J. S. Nolan's. Mrs. Justus founded the circle, which has grown out of all proportion to the brief time of its existence.

At their pleasant home, No. 631 Kalima street, Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Phillips entertained with a 2 o'clock dinner Sunday complimentary to their house guests, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Phillips of Wilkesbarre, Pa. The decorative motif was pink and white roses and ferns. Wolfe entertained with a surprise birthday party at her home, No. 8916 Cedar street. It was a prettily appointed affair, in which sweet peas were used to excellent advantage for decorating. Maman Cochet and Killarney roses also added their brilliant beauty to the rooms of reception where an informal musical programme was rendered by Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Gray, with string instruments. Games and the serving of ice cream, cake and lemonade happily concluded a memorable occasion in one life at least. The guests included Miss Bertha Mangold and Miss Ida Schwendner of Compton, Miss Lorraine Rowe, Miss Lola Woods, Miss Doris Stone, Miss Grace Keough, Miss Amy Lewis, Miss Nellie Schnediker, Miss Eva Wentworth, Miss Katherine Schnediker, Joseph, Edward and Evan Lewis of Compton, Ira and Irvin Booth of Los Angeles, John Clifford, Frederick Kneeland, Lester Hubert, Arthur Ellis, George Clifford, Howard Evers and Everett Schnediker.

MISS HAZEL FRANCES BOOTH, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Booth of Cypress avenue, and Ralph William Crook, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Crook of Rowland avenue, were married on Wednesday evening in Holy Trinity Episcopal Church by Rev. Alfred Fletcher. An audience that completely filled the church witnessed the ceremony. The bride was attired in white chiffon taffeta, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and bride's rosebuds. The maid of honor, Miss Sarah Crook, sister of the groom, was dressed in pink chiffon taffeta and carried Cecile Brunner roses. Two little boys, Robert Walker, Jr., and Richard Webb were in the bridal procession, carrying flowers. The groom was attended by his friend, J. Montgomery Douglas of Hollywood. The full-vested choir of Holy Trinity preceded the bridal procession up the main aisle, singing Mendelssohn's processional wedding song. A reception in the parish hall followed. The couple are now at the San Francisco exposition, and will go on to Lake Tahoe. They will be home this summer in a new bungalow built by Mr. Crook on Navilla place.

Even though this charming hostess and her merry guests enjoyed a most delightful day, socially, yet they accomplished a wonderful amount of work as the large and well-sewed balls of carpet rags well attested.

Orange.

THE pleasant home of Mrs. C. Oehlke was the scene of one of the most delightful meetings on Wednesday afternoon of the Altar Society of St. Joseph's Catholic Church of Santa Ana and Orange. The hostess was assisted in receiving the guests of the afternoon by her charming daughter, giving so cordial a welcome that the guests soon felt very much at home. The rooms in the house were beautifully decorated with a wealth of beautiful yellow roses, and as the hours flew pleasantly by the ladies chatted gaily over their sewing, the result of which was destined for charity. Plans were perfected for a cooked food sale and other social activities to take place in the near future. The delightful afternoon was closed with a delicious supper, where a pleasant social hour rewarded the ladies for their busy afternoon. Among those who enjoyed the pleasant hospitality of the Oehlke were Mrs. R. R. Shafer, Mrs. Earnest Pohlman, Mrs. J. C. Keefe, Mrs. Clyde Holt, Mrs. Henry Nau, Mrs. Anna Owen, Mrs. F. J. Waggoner, Mrs. Hanaan, Mrs. J. A. Maag, Mrs. Joseph Young, Mrs. John Rudolph, Mrs. John Maag, Mrs. George W. Young, Mrs. M. Kramer, Mrs. G. E. Shelton, Mrs. Horace Fine, Mrs. Forbes, Mrs. Charles Smiedeberg, Mrs. Mary Maag and Clarice Keela.

Mrs. J. R. Porter of this city, one of the most successful society matrons of the Santa Ana Valley, was the premier hostess at the debutante Orange county invitation golf tournament recently held at its golf course on the splendid grounds overlooking beautiful Newport Bay. Following the tournament, which was participated in by all the prominent golf clubs of Los Angeles county and Redlands, a most delightful hospitality for the visiting golfers and their ladies ensued. The clubhouse was so handsomely decked as to appear as a succession of bowers, and a luncheon was a pleasing feature of the occasion. Besides Mrs. Porter's assistants Mrs. Frank Remsberg and Miss Twist of Santa Ana, there were numerous charming dames present from Riverside, Los Angeles and San Gabriel. Among the Santa Ana, Tustin and Orange women assisting were Mmes. James S. Rice and James Willis Rice, Mrs. John McFadden, Mrs. William Malone, Mrs. Little, Mrs. J. P. Hatzfeld and Mrs. P. R. Reynolds. Mrs. Porter is an ardent golfer and is a star pupil of one of the most prominent golf instructors. A tournament for women golfers is planned for the future and Mrs. Porter will doubtless make a most creditable record. A successful social and dramatic event was the recent revival of the oldtime "Deestrict Skule," presented by the Fraternal Aid Union Dramatic Club. The State manager, I. E. Lee of Los Angeles, was a conspicuous guest of the evening, who greatly enjoyed the comic presentation. Orange people to the number of 200, including members and friends, filled the auditorium. Dr. Gerald Farwell filled the position of schoolmaster, and oldtime school accessories, including dunce caps, vicious-looking whips and "bokays" on his desk, represented gifts from his favorite pupils. The school board was present and were scandalized that the pupils threw paper wads and other school-room ammunition, driving their teacher to cover behind a large fire screen. A programme of absurdities was punctuated by a recess, during which the pupils and visitors were regaled with quantities of peanuts, animal cookies and all-day suckers. A programme of real merit was given later, contributed to by Mrs. Mabel Kressen, Leo Douglas, the Misses Florence and Helen Parker and Crocket Riley. Later medals were distributed in a promiscuous manner, "Teacher" Farwell drawing a fine silver medal as large and as genuine as a pie tin. The evening was one of hilarious enjoyment.

On Friday afternoon Mrs. C. V. Lawford delightfully entertained with cards at her pretty home on Topeka avenue. Dainty souvenirs were presented for highest scores to Mrs. H. M. Thomas and Mrs. R. S. King. A delicious luncheon was served by the charming hostess at the close of the games.

Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Varian and family expect to leave at the close of school for Elsinore, where Mr. Varian has the foremanship of the clay works.

Mrs. C. G. van Fleet and son, Charlie, arrived from Redlands this week for a week's visit.

Ike Glasser has returned from a brief business trip to San Francisco.

Mrs. Mary Fowler is visiting with San Diego friends and attending the exposition.

Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Edingfield enjoyed a visit this week from Mr. and Mrs. E. P. George of Juniata, Pa. Mr. Edingfield and Mr. George are cousins.

MR. AND MRS. A. D. HOENSHEL entertained the eighth grade of the grammar school last Saturday evening at their home on North Crawford street. An evening of games was enjoyed after which dainty refreshments of neapolitan ice cream and dainty cakes were served. Favors in the shape of candy kewpie banks were distributed to all.

A farewell party was held at the home of L. L. Easterly at which several Downey people were present. The occasion, Mr. Easterly's leaving for his summer vacation to Long Beach.

Mrs. John Rudd entertained the Embroidery Club at her home on East First street. The ladies spent the afternoon pleasantly combining their embroidery with a social hour after which dainty refreshments were served. Those present were: Mmes. Clarence Dimmitt, R. C. Dimmit, John Bartlett, John Edmonston, T. N. Ellis, Harry Myers, Mary Bartells, A. L. Darby, Georgia Smart, A. S. Gray, Elizabeth Martin, D. L. Strine, E. Gibbs, W. M. Booth, Joseph Smith and John Rudd.

Karl Hammerton was greatly surprised when a number of young people gathered at his home on the evening of May 22, on the occasion of his birthday. A cake with twenty-three candles kept everyone guessing until he blew out twenty-two of them thereby revealing his true age. Music was the pastime of the evening. Those present were Miss Reta Mitchel from the Van Stein Academy of Music, Los Angeles; Miss Hazel Hammerton, also from the academy; Miss Estella Wantz of Whittier, Miss Alta Phillips and Ramon St.ine of this city; Kyle Pollard of Covina, Miss Elsie Hood of Los Angeles, Joe and Roy Moore, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Sanders, E. Harding, Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Newlan of Little Lake and Karl Hammerton.

CHARMING in its simplicity was the recipe shower party given Saturday afternoon in honor of the brides-elect, Miss Elizabeth and Miss Eva Black by the Misses Read of North Central avenue. The rooms were prettily decorated with pink roses and carnations. As the guests arrived they were invited to the breakfast-room, where they each wrote their favorite recipes. Then each recipe was enclosed in an envelope and addressed to the bride-elect. Following an interesting game of cards a delicious repast was served. The floral decorations of the brides' table was a basket of pink carnations tied with a dainty bow of tulle. At the close of the luncheon when the prizes were awarded to the winners, Miss Harriet Wells, Miss Martha Porter and Miss Elizabeth Porter, the merry discourse was interrupted by the arrival of the mail man, who was no other than Deacon, the beautiful Scotch Collie dog, pet of the household, with a small mail bag strapped to his back in which was enclosed the mail for the two brides-elect, consisting of card catalogue cabinets and a goodly number of especially good recipes to fill them.

Miss Marie Quinch, soon to be a bride, was the complimented guest at a surprise party Tuesday evening at the home of Joseph Wilson on Chestnut street, given by the present Executive Committee of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Presbyterian Church and the Executive Committee of last year. Miss Quinch was invited to attend a surprise party to be given in honor of Mr. Wilson, but found the tables suddenly turned and herself the center of attraction. All enjoyed a pleasant evening in playing games. Refreshments were served and this charming bride-to-be was presented with a Brown Betty tea set. Those present were Miss Jean McNutt,

An Athenawear Demonstration

—and Athenawear is unlike any other knit underwear—

—Different in fabric; scientifically perfect in shaping; accurately sized, Athena Knit Underwear has several features that make for comfort and extra durability which will not be found in other underwear. These are reasons why Athenawear is to be found at Bullock's exclusively, in Los Angeles.

—For instance, the fitted seat; the three-cornered gusset; the low neck—lower in front than in back—

—Narrower across the back than in front to prevent slipping from the shoulders; extra full in the bust—shaped to fit a woman's figure perfectly—doesn't have to be stretched to fit.

—Nothing short of personal investigation can bring you to a full realization of Athenawear's superiority over other underwears—so Bullock's is making a special effort this week to demonstrate the points of betterness to women in need of Summer underwear. Investigate. There is economy in Athenawear—to say nothing of greater comfort and satisfaction. Athenawear is sold in Los Angeles exclusively at Bullock's. 28 styles and 38 fabrics. —The dedication of June to the extraordinary selling of muslin underwear has been an annual custom at Bullock's for years—

—Each year has seen serious, earnest, energetic efforts put forth in preparation in the world's most capable muslin underwear markets, with increasing results—because of increased knowledge, of increased purchasing power, and the increasing respect of manufacturers for Bullock's—

—Not one garment in the lot that the most exacting critic would consider "cheap"—
—Not one garment in the lot that is not notable for quality of the material of which it is made and the way in which it is made—

—And yet there are many, many garments that might well be considered remarkable for the extreme lowness of their prices.

Miss Jennie Horsch, Miss Vera Holloway, Miss Vivian Engle, Miss Marion Carmichael, Miss Pearl Adams, Miss Mina Robertshaw, Miss Mae McIver, Mr. and Mrs. M. Strafford, Mr. and Mrs. Widney, Messrs. Joseph Wilson, Hal McNutt and Nelson Sprinkle.

Miss Harryot Bayard, assisted by Mrs. Francis Bayard, was hostess at a miscellaneous shower, given in honor of Miss Christine Pauley, who is to become the bride of Edward Pinch of Los Angeles. The house was prettily decorated in asparagus fern, pink and white carnations. The afternoon was spent in playing Five Hundred. The prize was awarded to Miss Alpha Prindle. After the game the bride was invited to search for her gifts, which were hidden throughout the house. Later a dainty luncheon was served.

An event, which seems to be the first of an elaborate series, planned for the senior class of 1915, was that sponsored by the sophomore A class and given in the Masonic Temple Friday evening. The seniors had an inkling as to what was to occur, but only a few days previous to Friday evening were cards issued bidding "ye fond and reverend" graduates to attend. From the gleeful atmosphere which pervaded the hall Friday evening the affair was most enjoyable, and from the time the grand march began until the last echoes of the music died away shall in the memory of the seniors be one joyous time. Games were enjoyed by those who did not care to dance. The temple was prettily decorated with the sophomore class colors, orange and black, lending a touch of attractiveness to the scene. During the evening delicious fruit punch was served by four of the accommodating freshmen girls, Miss Annabel McClellan, Miss Jane Snyder, Miss Mary Ellen O'Leary and Miss Louise Gonzales. The committee in charge of the affair, who so ably assisted their class president, Edward Seay, were: Miss Mildred Wight, Miss Catherine Phillips, Miss Esther Serhremp, Chancellor Livingston and Ben Durham. The patronesses of the evening were. Mrs. J. G. Hunchberger, Mrs. D. W. Hunt, Mrs. I. J. Phillips, Mrs. David H. Imler and Mrs. Jane Ritchie. Miss Darsie and Miss Turner of the High School faculty and more than a hundred of the students were present.

One of the most charming entertainments of the week was that at which Mrs. Lillian E. Dow, No. 237 Orange street, received the well-known Thimble Club of the First Congregational, Los Angeles, of which Dr. W. Horace Day is pastor. Mrs. Dow was assisted by Mrs. H. E. Bartlett and Mrs. C. F. Parker of Glendale and Mrs. B. F. Sanborn, Mrs. C. E. Frear and Mrs. C. E. Foster of Los Angeles. Forty-eight ladies were present and luncheon was served at noon. In the course of the afternoon Mrs. Warren F. Day gave an extremely interesting account of her recent trip in Egypt.

ONE of the prettiest parties of the week was the dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Jack Egbert Friday evening in honor of the latter's brother, Wright Hubbard, who recently returned from the University of California. Pale yellow candalabra shed a soft glow over Shasta daisies and ferns, which graced the table. Afterwards the guests motored to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Hubbard, where dancing was enjoyed. The guests included Misses Julie Powell, Irene Eigholz, Marye Maclay, Nell Eigholz, Margaret Davidson of Los Angeles. Messrs. Jack Gibson, Roland Wilson, Jere Hille, Starr Diss, Wright Hubbard and Thomas Miles of Los Angeles.

Another enjoyable dinner of the week was given by Mrs. McE. Griswold in honor of her house guests, Mr. and Mrs. William Widney of Los Angeles. The table was prettily decorated with American Beauty roses and covers were laid for eleven.

Mrs. R. W. Mastick, who recently returned from San Francisco, was the guest of honor at an informal dance and Dutch supper at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Dolder on Brand boulevard Friday evening. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Richard Bonde, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Rose, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Jenifer, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Mastick, Mrs. Dan Bickham of Hollywood, Messrs. I. T. Branson, Walter Buckingham and Howard Harding. Mr. and Mrs. Dolder will entertain again in the near future for Miss Edith Gould, the latter's sister, who arrived yesterday from San Francisco with the expectation of making an extended visit here.

The Ebell Club inaugurated an annual luncheon Friday, the first of which was given at the Porter Hotel. Mrs. Graham Smith and Mrs. E. H. Schwinger were the hostesses and had secured an elaborate effect in the table decorations with the use of geraniums and cream and gold, the club flower and colors. Twenty-five members were present and Mrs. T. J. Walker, the president of the club, presided as toastmistress. Various members responded to the development and rise of American womanhood, embracing every phase of womanhood. Mrs. E. D. Baker charmed the audience with several songs. An encore much enjoyed was a clever adaptation to an old song of club words written by the singer.

DR. GRACE BEEBE, a June bride, was an honored guest on Monday evening when the members of the Sans Souci Club tendered her a miscellaneous shower at the home of Mrs. Fred Cunningham at the corner of Seventh and Joy streets. The shower was presented to Miss Beebe in a very unique manner. Each article had been wrapped in various-shaped bundles, numbered and placed on a table, and cards were then given each guest with corresponding numbers. On the cards was tied a small spray of lily of the valley and ferns. Great fun prevailed when the contents of the bundles were revealed. The evening was most delightfully passed in games and music. The many friends of Miss Beebe are vying with each other to do honor to this popular young lady, who in June will marry Prof. Carl Barry.

Refreshments of apricot sherbert and cake were served during the evening to the following guests: Misses Marion Wells, Laura Kirby, Ilo Hadley, Sadie Wroot, Rose Cechin, Irene Nonhoff, Ruth and Ethel Boling, Myrtle Newton, Inez Smith, Marie Henslin, Helen Lamson, Maude Farnham, Mary Hanson, Nettie Sewright, Lydia Hoy, Miss DeVana, Astrid Borchrevink, Mmes. The prettiest and most elaborate wedding of the season in Corona was held Monday when Miss Catherine Ye, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerrett Ye, was united in marriage to Orville W. Sayers. The ladies had transformed the church into a beautiful bower of flowers, garlands of ferns, interspersed with marguerites, being caught from the sides and corners to the center, forming a canopy overhead. At the altar were banked masses of beautiful Matilija poppies and carnations, effectively arranged. A pretty basket of marguerites and ferns marked the place where the bridal party stood.

Rev. Dr. Dotten of Riverside officiated at the service. Miss Grace Bierma sang "Constancy" in a very delightful manner. Mrs. C. A. Dickinson played the wedding march from "Lohengrin." The bridesmaid was Miss Lois Sweetser.

The bride was very charming and beautiful in a gown of white chiffon over silk messaline with a veil of silk net arranged with sprays of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and ferns. The bridesmaid was becomingly gowned in pink crepe de chine and carried a shower bouquet of pink carnations. The ushers at the church were two little girls, Loma Tower and Anna Grace Key, who were dressed in pink and white. Following the ceremony at the church a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents on West Fifth street. About 100 guests were present. A color scheme of white and green was used in the home, various flowers being used in the decorations. Mrs. Charles Baird rendered several selections on the piano during the evening.

MARKING the final session of the club year before the summer takes many away on vacations and outings, the meeting of the Woman's Club Wednesday at the home of Mrs. H. E. Harris at Tenth and G streets was one of the most delightful of the whole calendar. Mrs. Clarence H. Johnson and her corps of officers presided for the last time and the new officiary headed by Mrs. Brooks MacCracken as president was introduced. Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. R. F. Garner gave brief reports of the State Federation meeting in San Francisco. Corset Waists

H. & W. and Ferris Waists are shown at our store, priced from $1 to $2.50. Many women find these garments more comfortable and better suited to their requirements than the full boned corsets. Under the above names we also have a good collection of Maternity Waists, priced from $2 to $5.00.

You will be pleased with the resources of our shop, the courteous service of our skilled corsetieres, and the charming new Redfern models from three to twenty-five dollars the pair.

Hosiery

A half dollar buys the best boot-silk made. 75c buys the famous Phoenix Silk, the only hose worth while at the price. $1.00 buys the Onyx, Eiffel or Phoenix, the best three we know of at that price. Same three named above in super-quality at $1.50.

Redfern Corsets

Trousseau

In addition to the all important Corset for the Trousseau we offer a very choice assortment of Kayser's Silk Underwear, which consists of Combinations, Knickers and Vests, in either plain or embroidered, pink or white. Beautiful vests from $1.50 upward.

Beautiful materials shown in our Redfern Corset are beyond description in an ordinary advertisement. They are works of art designers and the colors are of the most delicate possible to bring out on silk.

Commencing Tuesday, the coming week will be a big Redfern Corset event at this store. We invite you to come and see the very beautiful and unusual window display of these most satisfactory corsets. The exhibit will be well worth the time and in addition instructive. Our company of corsetieres will be delighted to show the models and explain the important features.

A Lace Front Feature

THERE is one feature, small, but important, that causes us to recommend a Redfern model when our customers ask for lace front corsets.

This is the flexil-top clasp and front steels. If you have worn lace fronts in the past, you realize how bulky they were at the front.

Redfern Corsets, by the use of this flexil ground top steel, give an unbelievable amount of flexibility at the diaphragm, yet retain the firmness necessary below.

The Bride's Corset

The trousseau—what a delight! But among the riotous wealth of flounces of lingerie do not forget the corset, and this should be just as attractive as every other detail of the trousseau.

Redfern Corsets

Illustration at the left shows one of the satisfying models. A superior quality of coutil, delicate silk embroidery trim, elastic inset front and back, six hose supporters. Medium low bust with long skirt, well boned, but very flexible. $5

How You May Change Your Face Completely

Any woman not satisfied with her complexion can easily remove it and have a new one. The thin veil of stifling half-dead cuticle is an encumbrance and should be removed to give the fresh, vigorous, young skin underneath a chance to show itself and to breathe. There's a simple, old-fashioned remedy which will always do the work. Get an ounce of pure mercolized wax from your druggist and apply it at night like cold cream, washing it off in the morning. The wax will gently absorb all the lifeless skin and leave a healthy and beautiful complexion, as fresh as a child's. Naturally it takes with it all such facial blemishes as freckles, tan, moth patches, sallowness, liver spots, pimples. It is pleasant to use, and economical. The face so treated soon looks years younger.

To keep the skin free from wrinkles there's nothing quite so good as the old reliable saxolite lotion. It is only necessary to dissolve an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel and bathe the face in this as required.

Rialto.

ONE of the most pretentious affairs that has charmed society during the season was the dancing party given by Mmes. J. D. McGregor, H. L. MacRae and Thomas McHugh Friday evening. The large ballroom of Crowder's Hall, was exquisite in its decoration scheme carried out with a profusion of coreopis and greenery. The same color motif was used in the perfect appointments of the elaborate supper served in the banquet-room. Card tables were placed for those who did not care to take part in the dancing. Many guests from San Bernardino, Riverside, Redlands and Los Angeles were included in the list of 200 who were invited.

A large number attended the annual picnic of the Rialto Woman's Club held at Fairmont Park, Riverside, Wednesday afternoon. Garden Grove.

A MERRY group of Garden Grove young people accompanied the Y.M.C.A. basketball team on an excursion trip to Huntington Beach on Wednesday night. The trip was made by automobile and the ride to and from the objective points was not the least enjoyable part of the evening. The respective basketball teams of Garden Grove and Huntington Beach engaged in an exciting moonlight game, Huntington Beach carrying off honors with a score of 30 to 16. Following the spirited contest the company from Garden Grove assembled around a camp fire on the beach, where a "weeny" bake was enjoyed with an accompaniment of laughter and jest. The entire trip was one of pleasure with the exception of the disappointing basketball score. There were twenty-five or thirty young people in the party.

The afternoon was most interestingly spent. On the same day of the departure of the missionaries for the north Mr. and Mrs. Norwing will leave for San Francisco in their automobile, anticipating a delightful time at the exposition and convention.

Tustin.

THE women of the Tustin literature section of the Santa Ana Valley Ebell Society were entertained on a recent Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Harry Lewis, with Miss Minnie Childs as leader of the interesting programme. Current events were the theme of answers to roll call, and interesting articles from the Literary Digest were given prominence during the afternoon before the social hour. Plans for the annual outing were made, the ladies deciding to go to Orange County Park in automobiles on June 15 for an old-fashioned picnic with a basket dinner and hot coffee. But one more meeting intervenes between the meeting of Tuesday and the picnic, and election of officers will take place at that time. It is a foregone conclusion that Miss Childs will be again chosen as leader, as her splendid work has been a big factor in the unusual success of the section. Light refreshments of delicious sort were served at the close of the social part of the meeting, and Mrs. Lewis was assisted in serving by her two handsome young sons. Forget-me-nots and Cecile Brunners were at each plate and vivacious conversation made the repast one of particular pleasure.

With a most unromantic name, Rattlesnake Canyon is nevertheless one of the most romantic and beautiful scenic spots near Tustin, and the home of Mr. and Mrs. John King, located on one of its beautiful slopes, is an attractive feature of the alluring landscape. The ladies of the Coreopsis Club are delighted to make the King home a meeting place at least once a year. The automobile ride to the rendezvous on a late Wednesday afternoon was taken through most lovely scenery, and the pretty rooms of the residence were decorated with magnificent roses and double marguerites. Merriment resulting from entertaining pastimes planned by the hostess was an agreeable variation from the needlework that occupied a part of the afternoon. E. Matthews, Mrs. Hart and the hostess.

The members of the Ladies' Aid Society enjoyed a pleasant and profitable all day session on Thursday which was attended by a large and enthusiastic company. At noon a delicious luncheon was served, followed by informal conversation and discussion in the midst of which fingers plied merrily and busily to the accompanying click of scissors and thimbles and the result of the day's work were several quilts that will be used for the worthy purposes for which the organization stands.

Hammeraas seems to use oil and his work is so strong and that I applaud his wisdom of His color is good, though I that he sometimes sacrifices tion and drawing through that he will "spoil" his picture. 's work can't be spoiled, for the more he whacks away at it the more he learns. Hammeraas's vigor of handling, his instinct for character, are seen in "The Pirate," "Venetian Serenader" and so on.

Marian Leaver handles water color very well, indeed—but I wish she would take up oil. Then she would not have to be so fearful of her drawing, for if she lost it she could get it again without trouble. There is good color and good expression in her "Study of a Child," vigor and character in her "Tipperary." Artistic harmony is found in Rose Michod's portrait of a monk, all done in dull pink and dull gold. Evelyn Mondon's "Landscape," the side of a hill set with eucalyptus trees, is broadly handled, and there are delicate tones in Vivian Arban's "Evening," while Marie Clark's landscape, "The Road," is crisply done and well felt.

Paul J. Sprunck's water-color study of a nude man is fine in its flesh tints, and in action it is decidedly good. Genuine feeling for nature is seen in Virginia Ramsey's "The Winding Road," strength in Frances Shoemaker's "Old Man," a pastel portrait.

On the whole, the students of the school have acquitted themselves with credit.

"Blue and Gold."

Walter L. Cheever, who has a commodious studio on a beautiful lemon ranch in the outskirts of Glendale, and who works industriously among the lemons when he is not painting, is equally vigorous in both his occupations. An excellent draughtsman and painter, trained under Tarbell and Benson in the Boston Academy, his canvases are workmanlike and well considered.

Cheever has just finished some strong and attractive portraits of men and women, and has also made a number of good studies in what may be termed polite genre. One of the most successful, beautiful in placement and composition, is "Blue and Gold," a young woman in dull blue seated at a tea table in front of a window whose curtain filters the amber of California sunlight. The picture has much charm of color, and is very sincere.

Sincerity, indeed, is one of this young artist's most attractive characteristics. He is apt to be so sincere that he becomes at times overconscientious. He is rapidly conquering this fault, however, and it has almost entirely disappeared in the studies of sea coast he recently painted at La Jolla. They are full of the outdoor feeling, and have been done in a big way.

So far as I know, Cheever has never held an exhibition in Los Angeles, but I hope he may be prevailed upon to do so in the near future. Such an exhibition would give pleasure to art lovers.

In the Kanst Gallery.

An exhibition of about twenty-five pictures from various New York artists, with twenty sketches from the brush of Alfred Hutty, opens tomorrow in the Kanst gallery. The Hutty sketches will be shown for three weeks, the other canvases will remain for two weeks.

Though the pictures are by painters of established reputation, the sketches by Hutty will probably attract the more interest. They have already been shown in the Salmagundi Club in New York. All of them are from the neighborhood of Woodstock, painted in summer, autumn and winter, and all of them are forceful and direct, close observations of nature, yet not imitative. The winter scenes are especially noteworthy for their truth and beauty.

Eleven genres by Harry Roseland will be shown. At one time Roseland had a wide reputation for his studies of old negro women telling fortunes to pretty girls from grounds in a coffee cup. A number of these pictures will be seen at Kanst's.

The other paintings are landscapes. Two by Carleton Wiggins have sheep as the central figures; two by Gustav Wiegand are beautiful studies of birch trees in spring; J. H. Twachtman, R. A. Blakelock, Frank De Haven and E. Loyal Field are represented by one or more pictures.

An interesting exhibition that you should not fail to see.

By the Wachtels.

Each of the Wachtels is showing six landscapes in the Elizabeth Battey gallery, Pasadena, this week. The pictures will remain in the gallery for a month.

This is a thoroughly representative showing, all the pictures being carefully chosen from recent works by these eminent landscapists. They have already been exhibited in Los Angeles.

Elmer Wachtel shows his "Ceanothus," "Glacier Lake," "Santa Barbara Mission," "The Passing Shower," "Arroyo at Sunset" and "Trout Pool."

Marion Kavanaugh Wachtel's canvases are "La Canada," Golden October," "Arroyo Seco at Devil's Gate," "The Rising Moon," "San Gorgonio" and "San Jacinto Canyon."

Elmer Wachtel, Marion Kavanaugh Wachtel, Helen Balfour and Orrin White have just gone by automobile to Inyo county, where they will sketch for some weeks. Their first work will be in upper Owens River Valley, though farther east than last year. They will spend several weeks at Benton, a mining town at the foot of Mt. Montgomery, the highest peak of the Inyo range. As soon as the snow allows—about June 15—they go up into the mountains for the "glacial stuff," thus getting both the desert and the intimate sides of the mountains.

Miss Crawford's Exhibition.

Esther M. Crawford's paintings and wood-block prints are now being shown in the handsome new gallery of the State Normal School. The exhibition will be held to June 24, the gallery being open to the public from 9 to 4:30 daily, except on Saturdays and Sundays.

Miss Crawford's paintings, which were recently exhibited at Royar's, are from the desert and from Japan, and are strong studies of nature in many moods. The desert subjects are mostly of the spring time, and were painted only a month or two ago. The Japanese studies date from five years ago, when the artist spent twelve months in Japan and China. Some picturesque phases of oriental life have been caught. The prints are subdued and harmonious in color, exceedingly good in design.

Art Notes.

Elizabeth Borglum will give up her charming studio, El Rosario, in Sierra Madre, at the beginning of June, and will spend the summer at Ocean Park. Mrs. Borglum has been showing, in the studio, three or four still-life studies of much charm of color and arrangement. Her studies of grapes have genuine sunlight in them.

Annie Pogson and Lillian G. Ferguson will open an exhibition of their pictures, mostly California subjects, at the Hollywood Woman's Club House, on June 1 at 2:30 p.m., when a reception will be held until 5 p.m. The paintings will remain at the clubhouse for ten days.

The exhibition of poetic landscapes from the brush of John O'Shea has just closed at the Friday Morning Club. The exhibitor for the month of June is Jack W. Smith, a painter whose work has much distinction of color and subject. The Friday Morning Club's gallery is open to the public every day, except Fridays and Sundays, from 10 to 4.

The Mutual Art Association of Portland, Or., whose president is W. L. Everett Knowles, formerly of Los Angeles, is holding an exhibition of oils and water colors in the public library of Portland. The exhibition closes June 5.

EXTREMES OF BABYDOM.

One Weighed Twenty-three Pounds and Other Twenty-two Ounces at the Times of Birth.

[Philadelphia Ledger:] The stork has played a freak trick in the household of Michael Kline, who lives at Seventy-fourth street and Glenmore avenue.

Five years ago the Klines were presented with a little girl who weighed only one and a half pounds at birth. This week the stork again visited the Kline family. This time it left a bouncing baby boy, who, when placed upon the scales, tipped the beam at a few ounces over twenty-three pounds. The new baby weighs nearly as much as some five-year-old children.

Margaret Kline, the tiny girl, holds the record as the lilliputian of Paschalville. She took a prize at the Darby business men's carnival, two years ago. Despite her size, she has thrived, and is a robust child.

The Klines now say they have the smallest girl and the fattest boy in Philadelphia.

Billy Hunter Bartlett.

Bravely togged out in war paint and feathers he will bestride a hobby horse mounted on a coaster in the baby parade June 10.

THIS BABY HAS A FAMILY TREE.

TINY CHIEFTAIN IN WAR PAINT TO RIDE IN JUVENILE PARADE.

"Scion of one of our first American families," will be the title of the float in which "Billy Hunter" Bartlett, 4 years old, will appear in the Los Angeles baby parade, opening feature of the Juvenile Exposition, June 10.

"Billy Hunter" is really a scion of one of the very first American families, for he is a full-blooded American Indian, and his ancestry runs back to the days when the red man reigned supreme. His float will consist of a hobby horse mounted on a coaster and he will wear the feathers, beads and war paint of his family tree.

A special mass meeting for all mothers who are interested in the baby parade, which is the first ever held in California, will be held Monday afternoon at 2:30 in the offices of the Million Club, No. 102 Coulter Building. Details of the parade will be given by Mrs. Anna Myers and Mrs. James Westphaling. Ideas for the floats, which must all be founded on baby carriages, go-carts or toy automobiles, will be given. All babies from 5 months to 5 years of age are eligible to enter the parade. Three prizes will be awarded by the Million Club for the most beautiful and unique floats.

The baby parade is the opening-day feature of the Los Angeles Juvenile Exposition, which is to be held for sixty days in the old Normal School buildings, under the direction of the Board of Education and the Million Club. The exposition will feature the work done in the Los Angeles city schools during the past year.

Registration cards may be had at the Million Club or at the offices of the California Woman's Bulletin, No. 630 Higgins Building.

ACTIVE WOMEN.

Helen Braddford of Ottumwa, Iowa, aged 10, has made arrangements to enter the University of Iowa in September. She was graduated from high school and is heralded as one of the best mathematicians among grade students of the State. She will be the youngest girl to attend Iowa in more than ten years.

Mrs. Charles Coulter of Vancouver wore a pedometer for one month, at the end of which time she found that she had walked more than 400 miles in doing her household duties.

Mrs. Frances Willard Munds, a State Senator in Arizona, has been twice called to preside in the Senate since going to the Legislature. Mrs. Munds was born in California and was reared in Nevada up to her thirtieth year, when she went to Maine, there taking a scientific course in the Maine Central Institute. Soon after graduating she went to Arizona. She taught school two years and then married John L. Munds, for many years engaged in the stock business and mining. Her husband was eight years Sheriff of Yavapai county.

Miss Clara McAbee of Frederick county, Maryland, a brunette, 20 years old, five feet, five inches tall, with brown eyes, has been declared the prettiest girl in Maryland. Five hundred daughters of old Maryland, more than half of them residents of Baltimore, which is famed for its beautiful women, entered the contest.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Scott of Highland, Kan., are seeking a home with lots of land. They will need it, for, although they have been married not quite ten years they had nineteen children, all boys, and thirteen are living. They hold the record for triplets, having five sets to their credit, and also two sets of twins. All the thirteen living boys are under 5 years of age. Mrs. Scott once boarded a train with her thirteen boys and one first-class ticket. The conductor informed her that she could not take her entire Sunday-school class on one ticket, and it was not until she showed him the family Bible, with all the birth dates recorded, that he believed it was only her family and permitted them to occupy five double seats while paying for one.

MEN AND EVENTS.

Ben Zelinger, of Allentown, Pa., one of the youngest veterans of the Civil War, celebrated his sixty-sixth birthday last week. He was only 13 years 3 months and 13 days old when he enlisted in the One Hundredth and Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Regiment on July 9, 1862.

Tui and Vive, two members of the Samoan village at the San Francisco Exposition, were married recently, the wedding being held with all the rites and ceremonies of the Samoan tribe. Tui fell in love with Vive, he confided in Manager Knox, and asked for permission to marry, which was readily granted.

A notable record has been established by the school children of Waltham, Mass., in the destruction of 55,000 tent caterpillars' nests within a week. Harold Baker had the highest record with 1850 nests.

Antonio Alconco, aged 24, of Sacramento, Cal., who cannot read or write, was given permission to attend the sixth grade of the grammar school as an observer for a month. He said he worked as a mill hand, and had seen the children march and sing, and since then he was not satisfied to attend night school or the cosmopolitan school, but wanted to be with real live American boys and girl.

"Jimmy" Martin of New York, a bright boy of 15, was appointed guardian of his father last December. He says that his father had proved a very good ward and has quite fulfilled the requirements of the judge.

The latest claimant to the largest family in Georgia is R. W. Josey, who lives near Ridley, and who has had a family of twenty-five children, of whom twenty-one are living. Josey has been married twice.

Vacation, as well as other summer activities, means more if the hair looks its best every minute. Remember never to use a cleanser made for all purposes, but to always use a preparation made for shampooing only. After using a good shampoo one should find that all dandruff, excess oil and dirt have dissolved and entirely disappeared, and the hair should be so fluffy that it looks much heavier than it is. For about three cents you can enjoy just such a head wash by getting a package of canthrox shampoo from your druggist. This is the only shampoo that proves its value without cost to you, as Peterson & Co., 212 W. Kinzie Street, Chicago, will gladly mail one canthrox shampoo free. You will be delighted to find that canthrox gives your hair a beautiful luster and softness. It also stimulates the scalp so that it gains the perfect health that produces a heavy growth of hair.

The Doctor's Advice

by Dr. Lewis Baker

The questions answered below are general in character, the symptoms or diseases are given and the answers will apply in any case of similar nature.

Those wishing further advice, free, may address Dr. Lewis Baker, College Bldg., College-Ellwood Sta., Dayton, O., enclosing self-addressed stamped envelope for reply. Full name and address must be given, but only initials or fictitious name will be used in my answers. The prescriptions can be filled at any well-stocked drug store. Any druggist can order of wholesaler.

"Misery" writes: "I have been a worn-out man for the past few months. I am only 37 years old, but feel more like a man of 60. My physical and mental forces are much impaired. I do not seem to be able to think clearly. I am much depressed all the time and my usual ambition and energy seem to have died. I have headache and pains in my back."

Answer: Your condition is identical to thousands of others brought to my attention yearly. Yes, your physical and mental forces are, as you say, much impaired, but you need not be alarmed over your condition. The use of three grain cadomene tablets should soon put you back in normal condition and fit to combat any troubles. Cultivate regular habits of living.

"Mite" asks: "I seem to be shrinking in size. I am very pale and thin. I do not feel sick, but I'm very weak. I want to increase my weight."

Answer: You are anaemic and the food you eat does not properly nourish your system; three grain hypo-nuclane tablets cause proper food assimilation and increase weight and strength. Take them with your meals. Sold in sealed packages.

"Mrs. Ella M." writes: "Please prescribe for me again. This time for my kidneys. I have chills and fever, look bad, have puffs under my eyes and my urine is dark in color and of bad odor. Sometimes my back hurts."

Answer: You may have a severe case of kidney trouble. You should get almost instant relief and permanent benefit from the use of balmwort tablets. I have prescribed these in numerous cases of kidney trouble and they have given excellent results. Most drug stores carry these tablets and they come in sealed tubes with proper directions.

"Mrs. W." asks: "What can I do for a long continued case of constipation? I have headache and dizziness and my complexion is sallow. At night I can't sleep. I'm so nervous."

Answer: Continued constipation affects the blood and makes it impure. You need a good blood purifier and laxative. Use three grain sulpherb tablets (not sulphur.) They aid digestion, act on the bowels and clean and purify the blood.

"R. F. E." writes: "I have a very severe case of dandruff. My scalp itches and my hair is coming out in handfuls. Please tell me what to do."

Answer: Get a jar of plain yellow minyol at your drug store. Wash the hair and, while still wet, rub well into the scalp the plain yellow minyol. Rinse out thoroughly and your scalp will feel clean and active. Repeat this treatment three or four times after washing, and in a few weeks all your dandruff should disappear and your hair become healthy and soft.

"Corpulent" asks: "What will overcome corpulency? I am so fat as to be in my own way. I'm short of breath and cannot stand exercise."

Answer: To reduce safely, use five grain arbolone tablets. They are the most reliable reducers I could prescribe. Many are pleased with results from arbolone.

The 106th birthday anniversary of Mrs. Jennette Schwartz, a dwarf, weighing only twenty pounds, was celebrated today in Brooklyn Hebrew Home for the Aged. Her great age and diminutive size have made her the wonder of the home. She replied with intelligence in German to the many questions put to her. She could not recall anything that happened more than ten years ago.

Eli Shepherd, aged 80, of Tilton, Ill., is the only survivor of the fifteen soldiers detailed in April 1865, to guard the body of Lincoln in Washington.

George W. Garland, the oldest inhabitant of Great Works, Me., although 98 years old, has as steady a hand as any barber and shaves himself every day.

OVER THE SEA.

Dr. Karl Hefferich, largely through whose genius Germany has raised two war loans exceeding $3,000,000,000, is one of Germany's most successful financiers, although only 43 years old. He was director of the Deutche Bank, the largest in Germany, until the Kaiser selected him to handle the war finances.

Julian Alden Weir, recently elected president of the National Academy, was the first president chosen when the Association of American Painters and Sculptors was formed. He was born at West Point, N. Y., and studied under his father and Jean L. Gerome. In 1881 he received honorable mention at the Paris Salon. Portraits and genre pieces are his specialties.

Senor Don Zaldivar, the new Minister to this country from Salvador, is probably the only diplomat in the history of the United States who can say that his father held the same high position before him. His father was also one-time president of Salvador. Senor Don Zaldivar succeeds Senor Duenos, and is recognized as able, well versed in the affairs of his office, and progressive in his ideas and practices.

The Prince of Wales every morning takes a half dozen miles run over the roads about the British headquarters in France. On these occasions he wears the regulation jersey and white running shirts, with bare knees and bare head, and he jogs along at the steady dog trot adopted by athletes and prize fighters who are in training.

Gen. Suckomlinoff, Minister of War for Russia, unlike most of his predecessors, is a Slav and a Russian Nationalist, and was formerly Military Governor of Kieff. His work, until summoned to assume the task of reorganizing the military forces of Russia as Minister of War was entirely with the strategic problems of Russia's western frontiers. He took part neither in the Chinese nor Japanese wars, nor in any of the Asiatic wars, under the celebrated Gen. Dragomiroff, whose favorite lieutenant he was, and whom he succeeded in the command of the southwestern frontier. By profession he is a cavalryman, and is generally regarded as the most remarkable cavalry leader in Europe.

IN THE LIMELIGHT.

Rear-Admiral Robert Morris Doyle, who has just been placed on the retired list, having reached the age limit, was upon his retirement commander-in-chief of the Pacific reserve fleet. He was born in Tennessee in 1853, and entered the United States Naval Academy in 1870. During the war with Spain he commanded the Dixie.

Detective Captain Joseph McGovern and Detective Lieutenant John Kratz last week observed the thirtieth anniversary of their appointment as members of the Baltimore police department.

Gust Anderson, Chief of Police of Grantsburg, Wis., is the largest Chief of Police in the world. He is 7 ft. 4 in. tall and weighs 340 pounds. He wears at 7⅛ hat, shoes 14½ inches long, 52 coat and trousers 44x39. He is a native of Sweden.

Three notable figures in the present Kansas Legislature are E. McDougal Caldwell, 6 ft. 6 in. in height, Representative; Rev. John A. Bright, 5 ft. 1 in., chaplain of the House, and Maj. Roy Fleming, 4 ft. 3 in., a page in the House.

GOING TO THE CATALINA CAMP
45E

First stage of a joyful trip for lively boys.

Motorcarload of boys on the way from Los Angeles to the harbor, bound for the famous vacation camp of The Times at Avalon.

From a Prude's Note Book

A mother's idea of enough money for her daughter to marry on, is about twice the sum that her own husband

For Fun and Frolic!

BOYS HUSTLING TO WIN VACATIONS AT ISLAND.

Through Plan Presented by "The Times" Any Energetic Lad Can Earn His Vacation by Work After School Hours and Become a Guest in the Famous Camp on Catalina.

A SUMMER vacation on an island of the sea! It's enough to stir the most pleasurable sensations in any boy.

And a vacation on the island, where you will be the guest of a first-class camp, have the best of accommodations and nothing to do but to enjoy yourselves, with all possible provisions made to that end—that is so fine that it makes you feel good just to think of it.

Better yet, you can earn the right to such a vacation simply by using your hours after school time. The plan presented by The Times is so easy that many boys have already secured their vacations and are enjoying them in anticipation while awaiting the time for the realities to begin.

Here's the plan. All you have to do to earn a four days' vacation in the famous Times Camp at Avalon, Catalina Island, is to secure six new subscriptions to The Times for one month and thereafter until ordered stopped. You don't have to collect a single penny on these subscription contracts. Just get the subscriber to sign one of the printed forms which The Times will furnish you. Get six of these contract forms filled in and send or bring them to The Times Office—and there you are, all fixed for a four days' vacation with all expenses paid from the time you leave Los Angeles until you return.

Why, practically every boy in Southern California has enough personal friends whom he could get to sign these subscription contracts to insure him a four days' trip. All you have to do is to present the case. Your friends will be glad to help you win a vacation.

And you don't have to stop at the four days. Go right ahead and get six more new subscriptions and you get another four days in camp. Your opportunity is unlimited. If you keep on hustling you can win a good long vacation on the island, and you'll have the time of your life.

WHAT THEY SAY.

The boys who've been there surely ought to know, and they rise up all over Southern California to tell of the jolly good times of The Times Vacation Camp in the past seasons.

For four years The Times has conducted these summer camps at Avalon. Several thousand boys have been guests of the camp during this time. They are universal in its praise.

The very best proof is that these same boys are hustling again to become camp guests this season.

Bert Spencer of No. 3516 East Third street, Los Angeles, says: "I've got eleven subscription contracts so far, and I'm going out to get five more now. I'm going to stay in camp all month."

Vernon Blenkiron of South Pasadena knows a good thing when he sees it. "I'm going to get eight days myself first, and then help my chum," is Vernon's ultimatum.

"I like the camp fine. If I didn't I wouldn't go again, but I'm bound to go this summer," says Milton Gillispie of No. 1640 Shatto street.

"Do I like The Times vacation camp? Sure, I do. That's why I'm going to have my two brothers go this year," says John Mahone of No. 449 East Forty-ninth street.

Albert Avis of El Monte says: "I never have been a guest of The Times Camp, but I've heard a lot about it and the good times they have there, and I'm sure going this summer. I got my six subscriptions in two days."

Louis Breslow of No. 1436 East Twenty-second street: "I like The Times camp, sure. I just can't describe it, but it's great. Go and find out, same as I did."

Karl S. Baker of No. 110 South Broadway, Santa Ana, says: "I am sending in a lot of twelve subscription contracts at one crack. I surely am going to enjoy my vacation in The Times Camp."

"Save four places for me and my friends on the second trip," says Asa Carter of San Gabriel.

And so it goes. Ask any boy of the several thousand who have been guests of the camp. They all tell the same story—about the fine trip by motor car to San Pedro; then the delightful passage across the channel to the island; then the delights of the camp itself, with the daily water sports, the mountain hikes, the athletic sports and games, the [illegible] concerts and entertainments, the good "grub" and the comfortable camp accommodations.

OPENS NEXT MONTH.

The camp opens on June 28, when the first trip from Los Angeles will be made. There are now more than two dozen boys signed up for this first trip. In the bunch will be a party of seven boys from Brea—Donald Russell, Edgar Moss, Randall Wallace, Clifford Ford, Mack Senn, Joe Blanchard and Theodore Dietzel.

Boys from one town or district can go together if they so desire and can have tents and table places by themselves.

On the second trip, which will be July 2, there are twenty-four boys already signed up. In this will be a party of five from San Bernardino—Elmer Shafer, Ernest Culey, Shaw Edwards, Frank King and Albert Fulton. And so they come in from various parts of Southern California.

The third trip will be on July 6, the fourth on July 9 and the fifth on July 12. After that the trips will be regularly on each Monday and Thursday.

More than fifty boys have not yet designated what trip they want to take. The manager of the camp would like to secure their decision so soon as they can determine it, so that plans can be made ahead for their accommodation.

If boys of any school, class, Sunday-school, club or neighborhood want to join together and go in one party, they can work together for the required subscriptions.

One of the fine joy features of the trip is the journey from Los Angeles to San Pedro by motor car. You get fifty or more boys in one lot on such a jaunt and there's sure going to be fine fun. Then you go into the Cabrillo, the biggest steamer plying between Catalina Island and the mainland, and for two and a half hours you have a most delightful passage across the channel with many novel sea views—flying fish, porpoises or "sea pigs," very frequently schools of whales, spouting water high into the air, etc.

And when you get to Avalon you have a hunger that can only be appeased by one of those grand spreads in The Times Camp at noontime. It's simply a foretaste of the daily spreads that wait on appetite. The Times camp cooking is famous. Its chef and assistant chef put in their time making the most satisfactory provision for the hungry boys, and they've become experts on this line.

This is enough said. Get busy, boys, right away, and earn your own summer vacation in The Times Camp. A better opportunity never was before you.

HER RIDE WITH VANDERBILT.

CHARMING ADVENTURE OF A LOS ANGELES GIRL DURING VISIT TO LONDON.

BY DORIS COLLINS.

It was Tuesday morning in London, and a little crowd had gathered in front of the Victoria Hotel to see the Venture, driven by Mr. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, start on her run for Brighton. The center of interest was, of course, the tall and rather young-looking man in the formal coaching costume of checked trousers, long blue coat and gray hat, who came out adjusting his red and white boutonier and prepared to mount to the box. We all took our places, and after Mr. Vanderbilt had inspected each of the fine horses he took the reins, the guard sprang from the horses heads and we were off.

"Gentlemen, the road!" and the four white horses gathered their legs together and dashed gaily down St. James street and on out through the winding streets of Putney toward Brighton. The man on the box felt keenly the steady pull and exhilaration of his perfectly-groomed beasts as they answered to his slightest wish, and yet pranced about for the very exuberance of life. To be alive is really a joy in the crisp early morning before the last dewdrops have faded from the lawns or the subways have begun to give forth their steady stream of those who come to play their little part in the bustling business day of London.

The guard, in his red and white livery, lifted the bugle to his lips and all the vehicles gave way to the "Venture" and her merry party, as they climbed over hills, dashed through quaint little towns, beautiful woods and typical English farms. We soon discovered that our fellow-passengers were a retired army officer and his wife, from India; an English friend of Mr. Vanderbilt, who sat on the box with him, and Mr. Wilson, Mr. Vanderbilt's whip—an enthusiastic crowd who enjoyed every minute of it as much as we did.

The red poppies gave splashes of color to the moist green fields and the roadsides were still sparkling with tiny jewels. "THE SECOND GLAD BOOK."

ANNA GROWS UP. By Eleanor H. Porter. Page Company, Boston.

ICE and sociology have laid heavy s on the poetry of the world; and ology, combined with realism and by technic tangible as that imposed composer, has evolved a type of fiction—puzzle pictures of life— unanswered—which, by almost consent of those who are supposed about such things, includes the best of recent years," etc. But it is the consent of those who are not sup know literary values that grants to a book and profit to the these people who are not to know seem much to prefer a gilded, happy picture of life than truth with its hairy warts and ears.

anna Grows Up" is as much of a as Cinderella, a fairy tale without relative or wicked witch, and "glad optimism, intense, determined, gladness—is the magic charm that the whole of Pollyanna's world, her and for everybody else prac everything that is wanted. Literary damn it with faint praise and in a way that is not faint—but as well try to damn a fairy tale by pointing out its technical defects.

The "gladness" of Pollyanna gets on the nerves of some of us much more than it does at first on the nerves of the wealthy Mrs. Carew with whom the "glad" girl goes to live for a few months, and at once begins that optimistic game of being glad for the misfortunes she hasn't. Pollyanna scampers about the city of Boston, gladdening stray acquaintances, and getting lost. She finds Jamie, a crippled boy, who may be the long lost nephew of Mrs. Carew.

What does it matter to the fascinated reader that plausibility is tossed aside in the merry romance that weaves the destinies of Sadie, Jamie, Jimmy Bean, Mrs. Carew, Mr. Pendleton and Pollyanna? All are glad, glad, glad! Jimmy opens a packet of letters and learns that which allows Pollyanna to give him her promise true. In fact there is a lot of giving and taking of promises true.

So, perhaps next we shall have "Pollyanna Married" as a sequel. "Pollyanna" was founded on a unique idea—that gladness game—which "Pollyanna Grows Up" has copied—but why point out its flaws? The people who are not supposed to know don't care for little things like flaws, anyway; and the people who are supposed to know can see for themselves.

BOOKS OF VERSE.

STEPHEN PHILLIPS.

PANAMA AND OTHER POEMS. By Stephen Phillips. John Lane Company, New York.

IT MAY be right or it may be wrong, we do not know, to judge each new offering from a man of letters by the very best work that he has previously done. But such is the way of the world; and except that the world is very myopic some men of letters in their "latter, declining years" would be shooed into silence by the unpleasant truth.

For the author of "Marpessa" and "Paolo and Francesca" to write such a thing as "Panama," to attempt desperately to carry the mercenary theme to the higher realm of the muses, is pathetic.

"Who sings of politics fouls his throat" said Goethe. With all of his technic, exclamation points and sonorous words, Mr. Phillips is merely pleading for the United States to let British ships pass tolls free through the canal. "Break not thy pact!" the poet cries. There is a dignity about poetry that is certainly violated when the "sacred passion" is put into a lawyer's service. Goethe said many things and most of them were true.

Some of the other poems, particularly the shorter poems, are creditable to Mr. Phillips; but "The Midnight Guest" with a more dramatic plot than anything the poet has ever attempted seemed flawed with weakness—the murderous parents draw upon themselves no penitential emotions, and the verse that recites the deed is actually stilted.

"Vergil and Tennyson," "Sarah Bernhardt," "Death and Dreams," and a few of the shorter pieces, pieces pitched in a tone of less stress, are wholly admirable. Mr. Phillips has long been hailed and on no justifiable evidence whatever as a poet of power; his voice cracks whenever he essays a stentorian cry.

"The Quest of Haidee" is a wearisome "epic" in ten of the shortest cantos ever seen; and "Verses on the Coronation of King George the Fifth" is—well, here are samples:

"Once Alexander plunged into the East,
And at Arbela flood o'erthrew the Mede.
What of that Empire now but lonely stone?
. . . .
But thou, O King, all hail! Thou enterest
Into a kingdom dearer bought than these;
More surely established with a grander toil."

BRILLIANT POETRY.

VERSE. By Vance Thompson. Mitchell Kennerley, New York.

MODESTLY, modestly indeed, has Mr. Thompson designated this slender volume as "Verse." But high-sounding titles don't infuse quality into doggerel, and modesty doesn't conceal the flaming poetry of such pieces as "The Night Watchman," "The Naked Men With Torches," "In Broadway" and "Here and Hereafter." There is more poetry, real, readable, enjoyable, surprising, alarming brilliant poetry in this brochure of fifty pages than in the combined, complete works of Harriet Monroe, Ezra Pound, Nicholas Vachel Lindsay, Gerould Gould and a number of others who readily suggest themselves — and boost themselves in subsidized magazines.

Here is poetry with fire in it; imagery, rhythm. Poetry that is driven by the furious heartbeats of passion, intense with feeling. Here is the strange and haunting quality that no technic, no affection, no oil-burning gives.

This—"In Broadway"—is as strangely enchanting as one of Poe's own whimsies:

"I walk in Broadway to and fro
With the taciturn ghost of Edgar Poe.
Girls idle for us when the lights
Are red on the pavements there o' nights.
Girls sidle with strenuous eyes for us,
With gestures urgent and amorous;
But we mock them, pacing to and fro—
I and the ghost of Edgar Poe.
'Dear ghost,' I say to him, 'to and fro
As you walked in Broadway long ago
Did the small girls idle for you and cry?'
'Ho! the black stars swung in a yellow sky
One night, one night—and a woman came
Out of a harem of wind-blown flame;
But the lips that she laid on mine were snow—
Bitter as ice,' says the ghost of Poe.
I make the sign of the cross."

Pleasing or displeasing as the lines may be, it is not because they are colorless, flaccid. "The Naked Men With Torches" is powerful; "Here and Hereafter" is a weird, but at that a rather plausible, conception of what may happen to some of us after death. "Verse" is a memorable booklet of poetry, and space seems to have been too precious to include anything valueless.

"THE OIL CONQUEST OF THE WORLD."

Frederick A. Talbot has written a series of "Conquest" books, including "The Railway Conquest of the World," "The Steamship Conquest of the World," and now we have "The Oil Conquest of the World" (J. B. Lippincott Company.) Following the idea of the "Conquests of Science Series," he has been interesting rather than technical, and the book describes the history of the oil industry, the getting of the oil, its many and varied uses, the great oil "strikes," the oil fires and how they are quenched.

James Barnes,

Who has written a travel book—"Through Central Africa"—with a sense of humor. It is reviewed on this page.

TRAVEL—EXPLORATION.

ON STANLEY'S TRAIL.

THROUGH CENTRAL AFRICA. By James Barnes. Illustrated by photographs by Cherry Kearton. D. Appleton & Co.

ALL TRAVEL books are interesting—especially those illustrated by photographs by Cherry Kearton. In this instance, James Barnes furnishes the text and must have been in a wonderful good humor all the time he was writing. Every page or two is good for a smile, maybe a chuckle, but there isn't a roar of laughter in the whole book.

The party went in to get pictures rather than big game, though Mr. Barnes occasionally put an obstreperous lion or elephant out of the way. The route from coast to coast lay for some distance along that taken by Stanley, and they met many who remembered the intrepid explorer, found a former guide of his and saw the Mohammedan chief who gave him so much trouble.

Perhaps the most interesting chapter is "Alone in the Cannibal Country" at which time Mr. Barnes was temporarily deserted by his party. The chapter begins: "Mentoni, the old one-eyed chief after whom the village was named, bothered me so by constantly hanging round and pointing out the various belongings of mine that he would be glad to receive, that I decided to move on." It was some time before the suspicious natives were content to leave their bows and arrows aside when he was around, but in the end, by killing two elephants which furnished forth meats for well-nigh endless feasting, he established himself as "one of the family" with the cannibals.

The description of the habits of the wild game, together with the quaint observations and humorous remarks, more than interests—the facts are novel and the style unique. The ways of the camera hunters are pretty well known. The man with the camera endures more perils, must get closer to his subject, keep quieter than the regular big game hunter, and yet "shoot" with nerves almost as steady. "In the Little Back Room in Noah's Ark," which Mr. Barnes describes at some length, all manner of game sought the waterholes while the watchers in the "hide ups" shot ribbands of film, and some 200 photographs show with what results.

One gets much pleasure traveling "Through Central Africa" with Mr. Barnes as a guide.

KLONDIKE FEVER.

MAD RUSH FOR GOLD IN FROZEN NORTH. By Arthur A. Dietz. Times-Mirror Company, Los Angeles.

MORE gripping fatigue or greater anguish could not have befallen the party of eighteen gold seekers who left New York in the winter of '97 for Alaska, else there would have been none left to tell the story. Of the eighteen, only four returned; two are totally blind, the other two have very poor sight resulting from the glare of the sun on snow and ice; and these four survivors were found unconscious, and by accident, on a barren coast by an inquisitive revenue cutter attracted by smoke from their camp fire.

Mr. Dietz, formerly physical director of the Young Men's Christian Associations at New York and at present in the Playground Department in Los Angeles, organized the party which shipped out of Seattle on a leaky old tub of a brig that foundered on the return voyage. Despite all efforts to be careful, members of the party were buncoed by Seattle outfitters—the Seattle outfitters, gamblers, saloons and "women of joy" found Alaska far more profitable than the men who found the gold.

The party (which was temporarily joined by three other similar gold-seeking parties) landed at the harbor of Yakutat and undertook to push across hitherto untraversed glaciers toward the interior. Snow-blindness became terrible, and no relief could be found; but the party plugged on. The physician of the party, with the sledge of medicines, dropped through a crevasse—dropped to an immeasurable depth. Numbers of accidents occurred; Mr. Dietz broke his wrist about the time they found "fool's gold" and plenty of it. It was practically all the gold they did find, though two years and two months were spent in "the gold country."

The description of their encampment during the sunless winter, when no man could stir out of the cabin, and all—except Mr. Dietz who took physical culture exercises—became fat from idleness, when all trace of time and all value of money was lost, is of unusual interest. But the real horrors of the trip came with the return, when the few survivors—some had died and many had been lost—started for home, abandoning their tools and weapons. Dogs were used for food; rags for shoes; and one after another fell by the way, until the four survivors, after living on such dead fish as could be found, were found unconscious on the beach.

They came home without so much as a grain of Alaskan dust; but the Seattle papers (Mr. Dietz says to stimulate the gold craze) published the story that they had arrived with $500,000 in gold dust and nuggets.

HANDS ACROSS THE SEA.

AMERICA TO JAPAN. A Symposium of Papers by Representative Citizens of the United States on the Relations Between Japan and America and on the Common Interest of the Two Countries. Edited by Lindsay Russell. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

"JAPAN To America" was issued a few months ago and contained expressions of cordiality and good will from representative Japanese merchants, statesmen and men of letters. Each of the some 400 short articles was marked with Oriental grace and aptness; a unity of spirit and feeling was noticeable. It was really an exceptional and notable volume.

Now we have America's answer—"America to Japan." Representative statesmen, editors, journalists, ministers and professors bow and scrape and explain the American position and attitude. One-third of them would have materially improved the value of the book by keeping silent; but the Japanese have a sense of humor that far exceeds our own, and no doubt will smile inscrutably when they read that there is no "Japanese problem" in California, that it is all the work of politicians and demagogues; and when they learn that there is a serious problem, and how would Japan feel if so many thousand Americans had suddenly rushed into a Japanese province; and when they learn that Japan must be patient with the United States for we already have the negro race problem on our hands; when they learn a score of other things as argumentative, contradictory and contrary to the alleged spirit of the message.

"America to Japan" is far from being, as a whole, the straightforward, upstanding manly, face-to-face reply that some of us have expected who have awaited the answer to Japan's message. Mr. Bryan, with his usual smugness, quotes profoundly the Golden Rule; the Rev. C. F. Aked, D.D., LL.D., who is about as "representative" as hundreds of auctioneers who have been less fortunate in matters of publicity, compares the Japanese to the negroes. Many of the "representative" Americans discuss the question with the sophomoric stiltedness of undergraduates approaching a subject for the first time.

But George Kennan's "What the West Might Learn from Japan;" Benjamin Ide Wheeler's "Eye to Eye;" Dean C. Worcester's "To Our Near Neighbor in the Far East;" Joseph I. C. Clarke's "The Message of Big Business;" Hamilton Holt's "World Unity"—those, and many more express a true American spirit, are devoid of platitudinous bunk and ministerial whines, and carry a real, sane, honest, intelligent message to the people of Japan.

"THE MIRACLE MISSIONS."

An attractive brochure has been compiled and arranged by Vernon J. Selfridge in "The Miracle Missions of California." The author attributes much of the value of the book to H. C. Ford, who, "living at the time the Missions were in their glory painted them with unusual accuracy." Most of the reproductions included are from his originals.

A full page illustration is given to each of the Missions with a brief text on an opposite page reciting something of its history. The illustrations are half-tones, particularly clear, and taken from paintings of more than a quarter of a century ago that are little known.

THE ORIGINAL HAND SHAKE.

[American Boy:] The hand shake as an evidence of amity and friendship is a universal custom of long standing. It had its origin in military circles, and the original hand shake was between soldiers who wished to assure each other of friendly intentions. Approaching with outstretched open hands showed that they held no weapons and the clasp completed the ceremony.

The habit of shaking the beard is also reported to have originated for military reasons. In the days when the Phalanx of Alexander the Great swept into Asia, it was discovered that the full beard offered an all too convenient hand hold for the enemy in hand-to-hand struggles, and Alexander ordered his fighting men to shave.

"THE WAR WEEK BY WEEK."

In "The War Week by Week" (E. P. Dutton & Co.) Edward S. Martin has reprinted the editorial appearing in "Life"—that most refinedly humorous of all "funny" magazines. With an artistry signally conspicuous by its not being in the articles of others who have undertaken to lampoon the Kaiser, he touches with what may be called a serious levity on Germany's "misunderstandings," culture, methods of making war and military philosophy. What Mr. Martin says and the position he takes may not seem fair, but he is not offensive—unless one believes that so serious a war should not be discussed except with the bitterest intensity.

"DEUTSCHLAND UBER ALLES."

In "Deutschland Uber Alles, or Germany Speaks," compiled and analyzed by John Jay Chapman (G. P. Putnam's Sons) the attempt is made to show that by the utterances of representative Germans the whole nation may be adjudged somewhat crazy over war. Mr. Chapman is no clumsy workman; he dissects official and semi-official statements with a skill that rather conceals whatever bias he may have, and without praise for England or France undertakes to convince the reader that the Germans are really not able to see straight when speaking of the causes, issues and incidents of the war.

DESCRIPTIONS OF CANADA.

JANEY CANUCK, a newspaper woman in Canada who has "explored" the haunts of men who have pushed out on the Canadian frontiers, has brought out a book—"Seeds of Pine" (George H. Doran) —describing the country of big mountains and wide prairies, lumber camps and pioneer settlements, Indian trails and the strong commercial industry that is rapidly turning the Northwest into a new empire of civilization.

She is snubbed and frozen out, and all that sort of thing—but money will tell. It is much better than blood, for any genealogist may be hired to grow a respectable family tree.

"THE GARDEN OF PRAYER."

"The Garden of Prayer" by Frances E. Wagner (published by the author) is a small volume of verse and stories, strongly colored with a love of nature and a love of mankind.

PUBLISHERS AND AUTHORS.

Theodore Bonnet and Edward F. O'Day have long been known for their work in "Town Talk" (San Francisco) which is one of the lively, wide-awake weeklies of California. Recently they launched "The Lantern"—a periodical of lucid intervals—a magazine of a literary and critical nature, and the early numbers have been such as to meet with favor among the discriminating. The contents for April were: "Our Diminishing Discomforts" by Theodore Bonnet, "The Return, a Poem" by Arthur Symons, "Mr. Samuel Weller" by Edward F. O'Day, and "Charles Baudelaire" by Theodore Bonnet.

John J. Newbegin announces for early publication "Literary California," containing portraits and selections in prose and poetry from writers whose work is identified with the literature of the Pacific West. The work has engaged the attention of the compiler, Mrs. Ella Sterling Mighels, for many years and is the direct outgrowth of Mrs. Mighels's earlier work, "The Story of the Files," published in 1893.

In that volume, now scarce and almost unobtainable except to the determined collector, space considerations prevented Mrs. Mighels from covering the field as thoroughly as she wished. In the present work, not only is a survey made of the entire field, but additional value is given to the book by the wonderfully interesting collection of portraits, over one hundred and fifty, that will illustrate the text. Biographical sketches and bibliographical data will add much to the value of the publication. A complete index is in preparation.

Woeful lacks in certain kinds of literature are now and then discoverable in the libraries of the United States. In writing "Daybreak: A Story of the Age of Discovery" (Scribners) for example, its author, Elizabeth Miller, was obliged to import from England and Spain many of her commentaries, which were then translated from the original Spanish by her brother, Percy Miller, before she could use them. When war interrupted foreign correspondence the story was still unfinished, and the author appealed to the Library of Congress and the Hispanic Society of New York, which provided her with data at long range.

Mitchell Kennerley seems to have a novel of unusual timeliness in Minnie J. Reynolds's "The Crayon Clue." Although it is described as an effective detective story "The Crayon Clue" is based on Board of Education graft and scandal. It is said that many people in various cities will recognize characters and incidents in the book. People who have read "The Crayon Clue" say that it is primarily a good yarn told with a light touch and a very engaging reproduction of American colloquial speech.

P. A. Vaile, author of "Modern Tennis," the new and complete handbook on this beautiful game, is not only a tennis expert, as his journeys and tourneys around the world have shown him, but a philanthropist as well. He has a serious ambition to make the nations of the world know each other. He is now in America, promulgating a movement said to be the converse of that inaugurated by Cecil Rhodes; and Mr. Vaile's efforts are indorsed by Lord Milner, a trustee of Rhodes's will, and by the Rt. Hon. Sir Joseph Ward, Bart., of New Zealand. In brief, the Vaile plan does not mean scholarships for Oxford, but proposes to send out England's young men into newer lands, for study there and later report by writings and lectures.

Hauptmann in one of his many phases may be regarded as the Murger of Germany, said Andre Tridon in a recent lecture on the German novelist and playwright. No less than six of Hauptmann's dramas have for their subject the struggles of artists and writers before they "arrive" or resign themselves to obscurity: "Lonely Lives," "The Sunken Bell," "Michael Kramer," "The Rats," "Colleague Crampton," "Gabriel Schilling's Flight" present to us a gallery of types infinitely richer than those in "La Vie de Boheme." Hauptmann knew the Bohemian life from experience; he had studied art in Breslau, opened a sculptor's studio in Rome, spent many hours with the young revolutionists who wrote for Die Gesellschaft and received them in his Erkner home. He delighted in depicting those people at war with their own environment, finding no happiness in their art that disappointed them, in their married life nor in their extramatrimonial adventures. The stories are told without bitterness; in fact we find in them an undercurrent of humor and satire. Hauptmann knows how the world ought to be but he recognizes the tremendous fact of the world as it happens to be. The memory of his own struggles does not blind him to the ridiculous side of the artist constantly hampered by his unpleasant affectations or his megalomania.

A well-known dramatic reader in acknowledging the receipt of a copy of Henry Herbert Knibbs's "Songs of the Outlands," said "'Out There Somewhere' is going into my repertoire just as soon as I can possibly give the time to the memorizing of it. Some subjects I have to read many, many times before I can decide whether I can use them, but I had only read a few stanzas of this when I said, 'This is fine—I can use this, I know.'" In his latest book Mr. Knibbs has gone back to prose. "Sundown Slim," a story of the western sheep and cattle ranches, was published on the twenty-second of this month by Houghton Mifflin Company.

HOME UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.

ELIZABETHAN LITERATURE. By J. M. Robertson. Henry Holt & Co., New York.

RELIGIOUS DEVELOPMENT BETWEEN THE OLD AND THE NEW TESTAMENTS. By R. H. Charles.

THE EXPLORATION OF THE ALPS. By Arnold Lunn.

CHEMISTRY. By Raphael Meldola.

AN admirable feature of the Home University Library series is that every volume is absolutely new and specially written by some recognized authority on the subject.

"Elizabethan Literature" is by Mr. Robertson, whose studies of "Montaigne and Shakespeare" are known to many, and begins with the prose that appeared before Sidney and the poetry before Spencer; attention is given some other dramatists than Shakespeare, and the prose of the period is analyzed and presented with an admirable critical estimate.

"Religious Development Between the Old and the New Testament," is by Dr. Charles, canon of Westminster, and presents the recondite phases of the transitions of orthodoxy.

"The Exploration of the Alps," by Mr. Munn, author of "The Englishman in the Alps," gives a history of the legends and explorations from medieval days to the present, and devotes a special chapter to the place that the Alps have been given in literature.

"Chemistry," by Prof. Meldola, professor of chemistry in the Finsbury Technical College, is a thorough exposition of chemistry for the layman who wants to learn and not merely to be entertained.

Barrett H. Clark, probably the best and most widely known translator in this country today, is correcting the proofs of his Donnay volume which Mitchell Kennerley will publish next month in his Modern Drama Series. The volume will include "Lovers," "The Free Woman" and "They."

whether or not it can make claim to such nobility. If this work stood alone, apart from music, its audience would be the readers of such playwrights and poets as Galsworthy, Barrie, Masefield, Synge, Yeats and Maeterlinck. These are all delightful artists, but excepting for Barrie and occasionally Maeterlinck, their appeal is to a somewhat limited audience and the American box offices do not take in much money on their account.

In style, movement and scenic qualities, "Fairyland" is unequivocal in its beauty.

Opera, I had regarded as vague, chiefly because it was sung in a foreign language, but now that we have the purely American product. I am afraid that I find the argument as thin and chimerical as before. I grasp the conclusion, without a very clear idea of how I have reached it. One minute I am in this world, and the next minute I am somewhere else; then I come back to this world only to go away again, before I can fill my lungs with the sort of air that I am accustomed to. When I get through I am not quite sure who is a man and who is a fairy, but I settle back in comfortable disappointment and say, "Anyway, they died game, and they would have made a peach of a couple together."

The valley where it all happens is triangular, being only two miles on a side and having at one corner an abbey representing renunciation, at another the castle of the king, representing ambition, and at the third a village, standing for human love and its fulfillment in marriage.

The scene of Act 1 represents the left-hand corner of this triangle with the abbey at the extreme left and the village to the right. Beyond are the receding hills. Separating the foreground from the valley's depths is an irregular chasm spanned by a bridge in the path that leads from abbey to village. The yellow sunset of a late autumn evening falls in shallow pools of light and is displaced here and there by the shadows already folding the hills with soft, dark wings. There will be a little more of day before the gray ghosts of twilight come stealing across its dim path, then the Angelus will shatter the silence with golden tones, followed by a white star, a fairy half circle of moon and that solitude greater and sweeter than all save death.

Yet, before the night and its pall of silence comes the opera's first act.

In the abbey is Rosamund, a beautiful novice. She sees the young king riding through the sunset fields and yearns for him and life. Auburn, the goodly king, desires to lay aside his crown for a pilgrimage. He offers it to his ambitious brother, Corvain, but when the abbess, Myriel, protests, he promises it to her for the kingdom of heaven. He kneels a little later at the brink of the chasm, and while he is thus at prayer, his brother strikes him down, snatches his crown and leaves him for dead

Rosamund is asleep within and the young king lies prostrate without. In this consciousness, apart from the body, they meet in spirit and are crowned prince and princess of fairyland.

A year later Auburn returns to find that his brother has set himself up for king and that the people are paying taxes both to the abbess and the false king. Auburn tries to reinstate himself, but none will know him save Rosamund, who has escaped from the abbey to seek him out.

After some confusion they recognize in one another fulfillment of their vision of a year before, but it is only in spirit that their union is brought about, for Rosamund is burned and the king slain.

Thus the pictures are clear and concrete, while the story is confusing and gets one nowhere. I had hoped that American opera might have a more convincing argument and might even dare a tangible triumph, if this could be done and dramatic values still be preserved.

As it stands, the conclusion the author evidently intended to reach loses its force, and instead of having the human love established, we only have the world-old story of good and evil in contention with an indefinable resolution of the two forces after death.

If the story loses by telling it does not do so when read, for it is written as chaste as the scriptures are. Some of it is mad poetry. Somewhere Auburn says:

"Over our land flower the old blooms of Eden. Women shall bear,
And men labor ungoverned. There shall be
No law but love, no crown save of whose brow
Burns the star of the sea, and in her heart
The red rose of the world!"

Another verse, hinting at this delicious madness, I find in one of the choruses:

"Unfailing forever.
Her mysteries remain;
The blood of the river,
The body of the grain.
The autumn of her dying,
Her winter buried lying,
Whom spring shall deliver,
And summer crown again!"

When Rosamund first meets Corvain, she describes having seen Auburn, thus, beautifully:

"Standing alone upon the balcony
Yonder, and looking out into the world
Where the sun crowned the hills with gold, and all
The shadows filmed with silver, and the songs
Of merry-weary folk returning home,
Blew down the blossomy breeze, through the dull hum
Of bees and croon of doves around the towers—
I saw one riding on a great red steed,
Glorious in golden armor, with his brow
Flung upward in the sunbeams, and his hair
Burning over him like an aureole,
Pass like some brave archangel, clanging down
The mountain, over the river, through the vale,
Into the forest—"

To Myriel, the abbess, Rosamund defends her intimations of an earthly affection. She says:

"I do not love to look upon the sun—
Only by his light to behold all else.
And find all fair. . . Mother, I know this world
Turns ashes; yet—how shall I dream of heaven
Otherwise than by signs God shows us here—
The sweet songs and rich blossoms and kind eyes,
The glory and the gladness and the power—
Are these evil?"

Later on when Rosamund is speaking to Corvain of Fairyland, she says:

"O, far away, beyond all human need
The songs and flowers and crowns of Fairyland!
Ever the wrong so brave, the hope so frail,
Ever the day so long, the dream so far!
Have I not known! Surely these hollow towers
Will melt in melody down, and these vain stones,
Blaze into bloom, and, over the dark of the world,
The dawn of Fairyland rise up like fire,
Hearing what songs the little people sing."

The love scene between Rosamund and Auburn is exceedingly beautiful. She says, "Do I not remember—" he breaks in, "Thou, crowned with stars, throned among the roses—" she concludes "Thee, riding in golden arms under the sun—Auburn, the king."

The miracle beheld by Auburn in his first vision was the heart of Rosamund turning into a burning rose which was given him, and the glory of this rose sheds its light through all the opera.

I must close with just one verse of Rosamund's song of the rose. It is this:

"Rose of the world, thou art grown in all fields. There was never Soul upon earth but has worn thee and borne thee along
Under the bosom of joy, on the crest of endeavor
Blooming, a breath and a melody, blossom and song;
Still, when the kisses are done, when the battle is over,
Burning before him, beyond him, alone and afar—
Light in the heart of the saint; in the heart of the lover,
Fire; in the child's heart, a star."

THE HELPING HAND.

"How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

The good people of Chicago who heard Mme. Marie De Page, on April 7, describe the need of field hospitals by the Belgian army, made large contributions to the funds she was raising. A month later Mme. De Page was drowned with the destruction of the Lusitania, and the same Chicago committee that had already gathered funds for Belgian aid, met and decided that Chicago must send to Belgium "The Chicago Marie De Page Red Cross Field Hospital," dedicated to her memory. This meant the raising of $20,000 more. The subscription list was started by James A. Patten with $1000, and the total amount desired has already been raised.

Mrs. Elizabeth S. Caulfield of Philadelphia, recently deceased, provided that $3700 of her $5900 estate should go to the rector, church warden and vestrymen of St. Paul's Church at Kinderbrook, N. Y.

Dr. J. A. Lichty of Pittsburgh has presented a medical scholarship in the University of Pittsburgh for one graduate each year at Mt. Union College, Alliance, O., who contemplates a mdical course. The gift commemorates the doctor's twenty-fifth graduation anniversary at Mt. Union College.

At the recent annual conference of Catholic charities in St. Louis, Archbishop Glennon said the total cost of the charity work of the St. Louis diocese last year was $536,982. Included in this sum were the estimated salaries of 225 religious, to whom salaries of $177,342 might have been paid had not poverty been the pledge of their life.

Under the various homes for all sorts and conditions of afflicted or dependent persons and orphans the archbishop summed up $184,146; under hospitals, $85,244; institutions working among the poor, either at the headquarters of the organization or in their own homes, $47,519; and charities working among the poor, with no home sustained by the organization, $42,430.

The parochial schools did work, the archbishop said, which would represent $780,000.

The Wotsat Club of New York recently had a great party at the Manhattan Operahouse. This interesting organization, originated by the John Wanamaker stores, has had parties before, but they have been held in the auditorium of the store. The membership is now so large that it was impossible to entertain all the children there.

Children were trooping down Thirty-fourth street before 9 o'clock, although the party did not begin until 10, and so strenuous was the attempt to get inside the house that two boys broke a panel of glass. However, their injuries were slight, and after they had their cuts dressed they entered the house and enjoyed the fun with the rest of the children.

The name Wotsat is an abbreviation of the oft-asked question, "What's that?" The purpose of the club is to arouse the desire for knowledge of everything good. As the guests arrived the military band of the John Wanamaker Commercial Institute, directed by Frederic D. Wood, played some stirring music. Then the curtain rose and Knowledge was discovered asleep on the stage. A fairy appeared and tried to awaken him. But still he slept. Then she called Wotsat, Mother Wotsat with Strumm, Optick and some of the children. They decided to give the Wotsat call. Still he did not arise, so then all the members of the club helped, and when he heard their harmonious cry he immediately awakened.

At one side of the stage the name Wotsat appeared in electric lights.

THE UNCHLOROFORMED.

Admiral John D. Ford spent his seventy-fifth birthday anniversary quietly at his home in Baltimore. During the battle of Manila Bay the admiral was chief engineer on the cruiser Baltimore, but was later transferred to Admiral Dewey's flagship, the Olympia. On May 19, 1902, he was retired with the rank of rear-admiral.

Thomas J. Putnam, born of an old and famous Massachusetts family, which gave to the country Maj.-Gen. Israel Putnam, last week observed the completion of fifty years' service in the Congressional Library. He himself saw service with the Massachusetts artillery during the Civil War. As a token of their regard the officials and employees of the library presented him with a Seth Thomas Senora chime clock.

Mrs. Minna Mollman of East St. Louis, Ill., age 73, has achieved distinction as the "mother of mayors." The April elections saw two of her sons named to be Mayors of their home cities. A third was candidate for Chief Supervisor, sometimes called Mayor, of St. Clair county, Illinois, but failed of election. Fred W. Mollman took his seat as Mayor of East St. Louis. A month earlier his brother Julius, was elected Mayor of Mascoutah, Ill.

MRS. MASSON, the noted palmist, of London, England, may be consulted at 322 SOUTH SPRING STREET, by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND READINGS, FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn in his investigations along psychological lines that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HIMSELF HAS WRITTEN THAT information.

PALMISTRY HONESTLY PRACTICED WILL NOT tell your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in every-day life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill luck into wide paths of success and prosperity, can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.

Pomona.

PHANTOM MAID FADES FROM CONSTABLE'S CARE.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

POMONA, May 29.—An orange grove that is as freckled with woman footprints as an Iowa apple orchard is with rabbit tracks the morning after a heavy fall of snow is furnishing the police of two cities with the nucleus for the first phantom-girl case the community has ever known.

According to people who live in the neighborhood where the spook girl is said to appear, Constable Hardy of Ontario had hold of her Friday night, but she slipped through his fingers and faded away into thin air. Officer Pleasant went out Saturday morning to investigate the case and he says that the orange grove in question looks as though a thousand women had walked through it, judging by the tracks he found, and yet he admits that the mystery is unsolvable.

Friday night two Ontario boys drove over to the city for a lark. On their way home they saw a young woman in the road on East Holt avenue just beyond the city limits. When they overtook her she appeared to be dazed. According to their story, she cried for help. They took her into their car and started for Ontario, but she begged for a drink and when they let her out at a ranch-house to slake her thirst she refused to drink or get back into the machine.

One of the boys remained with her while the other went to Ontario and brought Constable Hardy. She is said to have told Mr. Hardy that she didn't need his help because she lived at a house a few yards up the road. He went to the house to arouse the populace and make inquiries concerning her, and in the meantime she vanished, although none of the three saw her disappear.

The Ontario men searched for the mystery girl until nearly daybreak and then turned the case over to the local police, who admit their inability to unravel the puzzle. The girl in question is said to be about 18 years of age. No missing girls have been reported to the Police Station.

JACOB IN SEARCH OF A JOB.

BY EUGENE BROWN.

"WELL, here I am, Doc."

"Yes; I see you are, Jake," said the druggist. "What do you want, a postage stamp or an almanac?"

"I dropped in to tell you I'll be ready to take hold in the morning," said I.

"Take hold of what?" exclaimed the drug man; "an electric battery? It would take more than that to shock you."

"You're wrong, as usual," responded I. "What I mean is that I'll be here tomorrow to relieve you."

"Oh! You're on the relief committee, are you?" snorted the druggist. "Well, you can't relieve me. I'll take mustang liniment first."

"Honest, Doc. I mean that I'm going to take the store off your hands for half the time."

"Is that so?" exclaimed the druggist, scornfully. "Why not wait till you get your beauty sleep and then take it all the time."

"No, just half," said I. "It's too much of a pull as it is. We'll keep her open night and day and I'll hold her down half the time."

"You'll hold her down all right, and if I had you on the job she'd never get up again. Why, you haven't even got a license."

"Sure I have, retorted I. "Dog, hunting, marriage and jitney. What more do you want?"

"No, I mean pharmacist," answered the druggist. "Are you registered?"

"I should hope so. Don't I vote every ten minutes?"

"No, I mean, are you registered with the State Board of Pharmacy. Can you fill a prescription?"

"I can fill anything from a long felt want to a date with a grass widow."

"Shucks!" exclaimed the druggist, "I don't believe you could fill a fountain pen. What would you do if a man came in from Dr. Skaggs's office with this: 'Spr. frum. VI dr. H 2.0. VIII dr?'"

"I'd mix it up and then take half of it away from him," said I.

"That's what I expected, but how would you mix it?"

"Mostly at the pump," retorted I.

"You get a red mark for being close," said the druggist. "Now, supposing a lady faints away on your hands, what do you do?"

"Wash my hands and scream for the police," said I.

"That's about what I thought," said the druggist.

"You bet you. I don't go tinkering around any dames without a bodyguard. I wouldn't loosen her corsets except in the presence of the District-Attorney."

"You must have been reading the papers," said the druggist. "Now, supposing a wobbly person routed you out at 5 o'clock in the morning and wanted an eye opener?"

"I'd try and sell him an alarm clock."

"What's your idea of first aid in the case of a gentleman who has absent-mindedly fallen off the roof of the Rosslyn?"

"I'd send for the Coroner."

"What do you do when a blonde comes in and says she wants a bit of color?"

"I'd either blush for her or else steer her against the paint and oil department. I'm a little bit shy of blondes and I'll take the brunettes. blondes and I'll take the brunettes. I'll take 'em to the soda fountain and give 'em nut sundae or fruit Monday."

"Or, Ash Wednesday?"

"Sure! The trouble with your drug store nowadays is that you sell pretty much everything except drugs. I have been hanging around here a good deal and I haven't seen a man ask for ulmus fulva yet. What has become of the party who regularly wanted his sanguinarium conadensis? You have bargain sales on ice picks, razors and dog collars, but why don't you work up a rush on ipecac and podophyllon? What has become of the old pink and blue lights and the floating collection of leeches in the drug store windows? Nowadays when a man comes along with the tummy ache he don't know whether he is butting into a barber shop or a saloon. You sell more soap than a grocery, more cigarettes than the cigar store, more booze than a gin mill and more cutlery than a hardware store. People come here to eat, drink and be merry, but how about the little pink pills for the man with the lazy liver. As an emporium for furniture, canned goods, auto supplies and china ware your drug store is a howling success, but when I want my bichloride of mercury tablets with a real tang to them, I'll have to go to some other pill shop."

"We should worry," said the druggist. "You'd be a good man to have around in the old-fashioned drug store where Gloomy Gus made people feel bad and then sold them dope to help them forget it."

"What's a drug store for?" exclaimed I, hotly.

"Well," said the druggist. "Since you ask me, I might say that it is a telephone booth for one thing; it is also a pie counter, a postal-card show, a city directory, a transfer station, a hair-dressing parlor, a candy shop, a stock ticker, a restroom, a typewriters' exchange, an information bureau and a branch laundry."

"Yes, I know," said I sadly. "You sell most everything but hard coal, anchors, hay and pants buttons. But what I miss is the old-fashioned prescription cabinet. It was built up in the rear of the place and looked like the throneroom at Buckingham Palace. There was the peep hole in the center so that Doc could squint over the store while he was fixing up Mrs. Bilkins's liniment. When Senator Spinks came in for his bitters the druggist would shut the little window so that none of the Senator's constituents could see him take his morning exercise. The statesman would take down a two-quart bottle and pour out about eleven fingers of liquor lightning. He would toss this off with the assistance of a dipper of water from the sink and after dropping a dime on the counter would walk majestically out."

"Yes," said the druggist, reminiscently. "Them were the good old days. We had one side of the store piled high with patent medicines, mostly made up of stewed dandelions and alcohol. They were strong and bitter enough to make the old maids think they must be good and at the same time they brought joy to the bosom of the town wastrel. If he took a jigger of his tonic before every meal he could keep cosily pickled all the week."

"Sure thing," said I, "and now that we have pure food laws and government investigators some of the drug makers have to quit business and go back to tending bar."

"I get you," assented the druggist. "The government wants to preserve people instead of letting them get pickled."

"Seems so," remarked I, as the conversation drew to a close. "Well, I'll be here for work in the morning."

"You will not," said the druggist, with emphasis.

"Do you mean to say that you are going to let your business go to smash for want of a live man with new ideas?"

"Not necessarily," replied the drugman, calmly. "But I am not going to take any chances on harboring a man who wants to break into the business in order to keep his skin full of hop. I'm onto you. You can't get your shot regularly under the new law and you figure on sneaking it on me in the silent watches of the night. But we fool you. We don't even keep it. You couldn't run one side of a drug store. I wouldn't leave you alone with the soda fountain. You'd either drink yourself to death or blow yourself up. If a woman came in after face powder you'd be likely to ask her if she didn't want some of Mr. Seidletz's and you'd be selling porous plasters for war stamps."

"Then I don't get the job," exclaimed I, in amazement.

"Emphatically, no," shouted the druggist. "Why, you couldn't even be a night nurse on a dairy farm."

"All right,' 'said I, as I left the store. "Don't say I didn't give you a chance. When the Sheriff comes to close you out you will possibly remember that I once came to you and offered to save your from ruin."

"Scoot," said the druggist.

"I scooted."

AMATEURS TO GIVE EVENING OF PLAYS.

CIVIC REPERTORY COMPANY TO OFFER INTERESTING PROGRAMME.

An interesting programme of one-act plays will be offered by the Civic Repertory Company of Los Angeles, at the Little Theater, Thursday and Friday evenings.

This earnest body of young amateurs has been performing some dramatic experiments during the past season which have attracted unusual attention on account of their novelty. One of these which called forth high praise from local reviewers, was the presentation of a play with a color scheme of pure black and white carried out in the scenery, furniture and the costumes of the actors.

The experiment was so successful that it has been found necessary to repeat it. "A Maker of Dreams" is the title of the play. Miss Florence Brown will play Pierrette; Cecil Irish will be Pierrot, who goes in search of love, and Max Pollock will be the manufacturer (of dreams) who helps him to find the love he is seeking, waiting for him at his own hearthside.

Prof. Forrest Bailey of the department of English at Manual Arts High School, has written a play called "A Departure," which will be a part of the coming programme of the civic repertory. The piece deals with the refusal of a husband to allow his literary wife to make "copy" out of him any longer, and the entrance of her next victim upon the scene. Clarence Voight, Wendell Wilson and Miss Dora Holmes will take the chief parts.

A third number of the civic repertory's bill will be Lord Dunsany's startling playlet, "The Glittering Gate." Two burglars find themselves locked out of Paradise, and proceed to use the arts of their craft in an attempt to break through. The piece has created a sensation whenever it has been produced. Victor Rottman will be Bill, and Harold Mosher, Jim.

A Japanese pantomime will be staged by Miss Marion Norris as the fourth number.

Here's Your Chance!

FIFTEEN DAYS OF WORK, THEN SIX MONEY REWARDS

Half Dozen Extra Prizes of Gold Coin for Those Showing Greatest Number of New Yearly Subscriptions Between June First and Fifteenth, Inclusive—An Opportunity for Every Scholarship Contestant.

NOW for two weeks of downright, earnest and enthusiastic work for new yearly subscriptions to The Times. The manager of the Educational Contest has decided to make an offer for these two weeks that will appeal to every contestant. You have the chance to start right in and win.

Six cash prizes, entirely extra and above the regular credits given in this contest, will be awarded to the six contestants having the six highest lots of new yearly subscriptions secured between June 1 and June 15, inclusive.

Every subscription you get counts its full credit on your voting score, toward landing you among the scholarship prize winners—but this is a special offer for new yearly subscription contracts only. The contestant securing the first highest number of new yearly contracts during the time designated above will receive $15 in gold coin; the second highest, $12; the third, $10; the fourth, $7; the fifth, $4, and the sixth, $2.

Every one of these extra prizes is well worth working for. It is a certainty that six of the candidates will receive the extra rewards. You might as well be one of the six as any one else. Make up your mind that no matter who else starts in for these extra prizes, you will capture that $15. Remember, this applies entirely to new subscriptions for twelve months. The subscriber doesn't have to pay in advance, and it is just as easy to talk for a twelve months' contract as for one for three months.

This gives a fifteen-days' campaign, with the chance for some one to win a dollar for every day of the time, and five others to win lesser extra rewards, but well worth having. It means that every contestant should determine to start in the first day of June and hustle for new subscriptions until the close of June 15. Your chance is just as good for the main reward of $15 as is that of any other contestant. It's up to you to make good if you want to participate in this special distribution of good hard coin.

THOSE CLUB VOTES.

Yesterday was indeed a busy time at The Times Educational Contest headquarters. With the very first moments when the office doors were opened came the first reports of contestants, anxious to have their subscription contracts in before the offer closed. All day long they came, piling up the work on the book-keeper so that it was absolutely impossible to complete the club count—and they came in by mail last night. This means that the credits for clubs cannot be computed until within the present week, when the proper credits will be issued to each contestant. This special vote offer has been highly profitable to many contestants.

Now comes the special two-weeks' campaign for new yearly subscriptions, in which six contestants will receive cash rewards. The campaign on this is to be short and decisive. You may win the first prize of $15 by earnest work during the first two weeks of June. Get busy.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Miss Lois Starbuck of San Dimas is one of the very latest entrants. She will begin a vigorous campaign this week and has such a promising territory that it is reasonably certain she will soon have a fine position in the vote count.

Miss Lillian Greene of Del Rosa is a very recent entrant to the corps of campaign workers, but she shows qualities of becoming one of the leaders within a very short time. Her report yesterday shows eleven subscription contracts—and she is just starting. Miss Greene has a wide acquaintance throuhgout the Del Rosa and Highland districts and with such a field before her is bound to quickly reach a fine position in the vote count. This is simply another instance of what the new candidates can do by entering the campaign at once.

Llewellyn Price of Manhattan Beach is also a new entrant who shows how to go right out and get business. His very first report gives him a good standing. He will be heard from right along.

Miss Bessie Jones, the little business woman of Gardena, once more scores a triumph. She visited Fillmore last week, and combined business with pleasure. The result is that from this territory there rolls in votes to the amount of close to 30,000 for Bessie. She makes every opportunity count in her favor in this campaign.

And here comes the wonder-worker of Pasadena—Earl Stanley of No. 389 North Fair Oaks avenue, phone, Fair Oaks 2394. Earl walked into headquarters yesterday and laid down a bunch of subscription contracts, and then said he'd have the rest of the lot in some time last night. He remarked, incidentally, that he had been sick a part of the time the last week, so couldn't give the campaign the attention that he wanted to give it.

John D. Duffy of No. 168 East H street, Colton, sends in a fine bunch of subscription contracts. Watch his vote count climb ahead. Miss Helen Wilson of El Centro also sends in a fine report.

Miss Lillian Greene, Candidate from Del Rose, who entered the campaign only a few days ago, and who already makes a good showing in the vote count.

Overton B. Ross, the hustling candidate of No. 10 Allen court, Riverside, sent in a bunch of subscription contracts yesterday that helped to keep the book-keeper up to the ears in work.

TAXES TO BE LIGHTER.

Falling Off in Oil Output of Emory and Murphy Leases will Cause Reduction of Assessment.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

FULLERTON, May 26.—On account of a falling off in oil output on the Murphy and Emory leases it is said there will be a decrease in the assessments on those properties this year. On the other hand, there will be a slight increase on the new oil properties in the north part of this city. The increase in valuation in the city, including new buildings and on other improvements, will be about $100,000.

Samuel Kraemer, a wealthy pioneer resident of Placentia, has leased 440 acres of hill land near Yorba to Brand & Stephens for oil development.

License Indicates It.

PROMINENT ANGELENOS QUIETLY WED AT BAY?

THE issuance of a marriage license in San Francisco yesterday afternoon to William A. Faris and Miss Alice E. Hynes, both of Los Angeles, startled business and social circles of this city last night, as the would-be benedict and bride are supposed to be William A. Faris, secretary of Muse, Faris & Walker, proprietros of the big Fifth-street Department Store, and Miss Alice E. Hynes, well-known society woman of No. 2225 West Eleventh street.

Mr. Faris left for San Francisco a few days ago on a supposed business trip. Miss Hynes is not at her residence in this city. The description of the two taking out the license fits them exactly, and friends of the couple stated last night they must be the licensed ones. Though Mr. Faris told the license clerk his home is Los Angeles, he registered at his hotel as from Nebraska.

Archie J. MacCorquodale, assistant manager of the big store, was both surprised and excited last night when told of the news.

"It is too astounding to be true," he gasped over the telephone. "Mr. Faris was to meet me in San Francisco June 16. He went there on business, I thought.

"Mr. Faris has known Miss Hynes many years. They have always been excellent friends, but no one dreamed they intended to be married so hurriedly, if at all. But from the description, I guess they are the ones, all right."

Mr. Faris is 42 years old. He lives at No. 5520 Echo avenue, this city. For many years he has been prominently connected with the retail mercantile business of this city, and was one of the founders of the great store owned by his firm. He has never married.

Miss Hynes is well known in social circles of this city, having been prominent in charitable and social work.

Mr. MacCorquodale wondered last night if he would find his business associate in the northern city when he goes there next month. But perhaps the honeymoon will be taken at the fair, he thinks.

SOUTHERN CROP REPORTS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CARPINTERIA, May 29.—While the apricot, pear and peach crop in other sections of the State will be short this year on account of the late cool weather, Carpinteria Valley was untouched. As a result the ranchers here will harvest the largest fruit crop in years. The main interest is in the apricot of which there are large orchards and the trees are heavily laden with the fruit. The demand for apricots was not good last year and the ranchers had some difficulty in disposing of their dried apricots, but it is expected this year that the fruit will be taken early at high prices.

The walnut crop in the valley promises to be a record-breaker. The winter was mild and the rains came at such intervals that the ground received the greatest benefit possible and the walnut trees are showing the effect. The settings will average over four in a cluster and as high as thirteen nuts have been found in a single cluster. Three nuts is considered a good cluster. Examination fails to disclose any appreciable presence of blight so that the crop should be above the average in quality.

The coddling moth, which made some appearance last year, will do no damage this year. Under the direction of County Horticultural Commissioner C. W. Beers, the ranchers sprayed their apple and pear trees, which was the breeding place of the moth, with the result that at least ninety-five per cent. of the pest was destroyed before they had done any damage.

All of the beans in the valley have been planted and some of the ranchers have begun cultivating their crop. The weather of the past two weeks has been very favorable and the young beans have made a rapid growth. Many of the ranchers are innoculating their beans with a scientific preparation and are expecting a larger yield of a better quality of bean than they have ever grown before. A large percentage of the seed beans has been planted under contract.

THROUGH AGENCY

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PORTERVILLE, May 29.—Dr. W. J. Hunter Emery, appointed chairman of a committee of growers to start organization work on a plan for handling orange marketing through a clearing-house agency without in any way interfering with present affiliations of the growers as to packers, has announced the general organization committee to include Dr. S. A. Barber, Burt Cole, C. E. Lewis and W. H. Shry. The chairman will also act as an ex-officio member.

In general it is proposed to pledge to the clearing-house organization, which will be entirely in the hands of the growers, at least ninety per cent. of the crop. The clearing-house management will absolutely control distribution of fruit to the various market centers and at times through the season as the conditions indicate will put minimum prices on the output.

It is claimed that by maintaining the various packing agencies competition will be secured in maximum prices for the fruit, as a result of which the growers will benefit.

PLENTY OF CLINGS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VISALIA, May 29.—Despite cold weather in April which resulted in some dropping of the fruit, deciduous growers of this district declare that the largest crop of cling peaches in the history of this district will be marketed this summer and fall. While there is some gloom in market quarters and while there appears to be a possibility that prices will be lower than usual for dried fruit and canning goods, it is believed that the amount of the crop will compensate for slight falling off in prices.

Heavy thinning of the peaches has been necessary in addition to the fruit which was lost in the unseasonable April weather.

VALENCIAS SHIPPED.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LINDSAY, May 29.—To date 247 cars of Valencias have been marketed from the Lindsay district, with a prospect that 500 cars more will go before the conclusion of the packing season.

This year the fruit has run very largely to the wanted sizes and as a result practically all of the output that has gone forward has brought the growers at least $1.50 per box net.

There is a prospect throughout this district for the largest early navel crop in the history of this section. Trees are loaded with green oranges, all of which give every evidence of setting well and maturing.

ONIONS PROFITABLE.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

IMPERIAL, May 29.—The alluring prospects of realizing $800 per acre from onions is held out by F. H. Hopewell, a rancher north of here. He brought six Bermuda onions to town and their total weight was a few ounces over thirteen pounds. The largest one stretched the tape, stripped, just twenty-two inches in circumference. In forty-eight rows, each about 100 yards long, Mr. Hopewell secured 250 sacks, which will bring him close to $500. He says with proper preparation and care $800 per acre may be cleared.

EARLY POTATOES.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

HOLTVILLE, May 29.—The first carload of early potatoes has been shipped by the Davenport-Messenger-Kavanaugh Company. From the southern boundary they are being sent to the northern frontier, being consigned to Alaska. Potatoes are a new crop. They are large and smooth without a sign of scale and according to some growers will run twenty bushels to the acre. W. H. Sieg, a ranchman of Heber, asserts two crops a year may be grown. The carload is expected to bring 3¼ or 3½ cents a pound.

BRAWLEY GREEN CORN.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

BRAWLEY, May 29.—Green corn is now moving and is being included in the carload of vegetables being shipped from here each night. Other seasonable products included in the shipments are green beans, okra, squash, tomatoes and cucumbers. Cantaloupe shipping is increasing and in a week should be in full swing. There is some speculation as to whether last year's record of 250 carloads of melons shipped in one day will be eclipsed.

BEEF SHIPMENT.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

TULARE, May 29.—What ranks as one of the largest single shipments of beef cattle to be made from this district was shipped today from the Tagus ranch to a Los Angeles packing-house. There were 161 head of grass steers in the lot and they brought $12,625.

Buyers for the Los Angeles concern stated that the cattle comprised one of the finest lots of grass-fed stuff he had ever purchased in California.

BANNING CHERRIES.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

BANNING, May 29.—Cherries are ripe here. The first local cherries for the season were picked on the famous old Highland Home rancho yesterday and sent to the markets. The cherry crop in this section will be large this year, little damage having been done by early frost. Cherries at Cherrycroft in Yucaipa will not be ripe for a week.

Goldfield.

ATMOSPHERE IS CLEARING.

BRIGHTER OUTLOOK NOW IN APEX CONTROVERSY.

Warring Factions of Merger Mines and Booth Company Get Together to Frame Amicable Settlement. Atlanta Establishes Position as Steady Producer—Mining Notes.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) May 27.—The future of Goldfield has again suddenly assumed a promising aspect. After approximately five months of depression, which almost in the twinkling of an eye blighted the camp's third period of prosperity and general activity when it was well under way, the litigation involving the majority and minority interests of the Goldfield Merger Mines Company is losing its form as an unfavorable factor and there is no gainsaying the fact that the district will soon again be occupying its deserved position in the mining world.

Upon his return to his headquarters in Reno Thursday from San Francisco, after numerous conferences with representatives of the minority interests of the Merger company, George Wingfield announced that the internal controversy had practically been settled. He explained that the details of the adjustment would be worked out at a special meeting of the board of directors to be held in the Bay City next Friday, after which an announcement will be made. Mr. Wingfield, however, stated that the Reorganized Booth Mining Company of Goldfield, under the new arrangement, is to give the Goldfield Merger Mines Company a side-line agreement for a stock consideration and that the board of directors of the latter company is to be reorganized at the forthcoming meeting.

Although Mr. Wingfield declined to discuss further the details of the tentative basis of settlement decided upon at the conferences in San Francisco, unofficial advices received were to the effect that the conferees agreed that the Merger stock virtually held in pool by the Goldfield Deep Mines Company, holding corporation, is to be released and that the capital of the Merger company is to be increased 1,000,000 shares, of which 750,000 shares will be given to the Reorganized Booth Company in settlement of apex rights. The same advice added that all the lesser disputes involved had been settled and that the minority interests reserved the right to sue, on behalf of the company, for the recovery of the Velvet claim, the sale of which to the Jumbo Extension Company precipitated the litigation.

Jumbo Extension.

But little information has been received as to the special meeting of the stockholders of the Jumbo Extension Mining Company at Phoenix, Ariz., Thursday afternoon. A wire from Charles S. Sprague, vice-president and general manager of the company, was to the effect that the session was harmonious and that the capital stock was increased 300,000 shares, which will be turned over to the Reorganized Booth Mining Company of Goldfield in settlement of the apex rights suit, instituted by it. In return, the Jumbo Extension Company is to receive a deed to all ores of veins in its territory, apexing in the Booth. Mr. Sprague's wire made no mention as to whether or not the posibility of a suit by the Merger company for the recovery of the Velvet claim was considered at the meeting.

Atlanta Mines.

Having passed far beyond the prospect stage, the Atlanta has firmly established itself as one of Goldfield's steady producers and it is now sending to the smelters daily an average of fifty tons of ore. Although recent developments have been of a routine character, the operations being prosecuted under the supervision of General Manager A. I. D'Arcy are slowly but surely increasing the ore resources of the property. There is every reason to believe that the continued exploration of the already proven vast ore bodies will make of the Atlanta in the near future one of the camp's heaviest producers.

Great Bend.

After several weeks of prepartory work, the Goldfield Great Bend Mining Company, operating in the Diamondfield section of the Goldfield district, is unwatering its main vertical shaft. When this task is completed within the next few weeks, actual underground operations will be resumed and the exploration of the big ore bodies opened up in the early days of the district will again be taken up. The equipment which the company has placed on the shaft recently includes a forty horse power electric hoist, an eight-drill air compressor, fifty-five foot gallows frame and a sinking pump of large capacity. It is estimated that the water in the workings of the mine measures 4,000,000 gallons.

Silver Pick.

General Superintendent Walter S. Norris has gotten ten lateral operations well under way on the 700-foot level of the property of the Silver Pick Consolidated Mines Company, to which the main shaft was recently sunk from the 500-foot point. The pump which in the past has been handling the flow of water has been moved down from the 500 to the 700-foot level and is now raising approximately 140,000 gallons per day. The east crosscut on the new bottom level has been extended about fifty feet and a west crosscut on the same level is soon to be started.

Other Properties.

Routine developments have been the rule during the week in all the other properties of the camp. The new stope on the 250-foot level of the Florence mine continues to give a splendid account of itself, the output of ore being normal. At the Lone Star, drifting north continues on the 250-foot level of the Nelligan shaft.

Lateral work on the new 700-foot level of the property of the Silver Pick Consolidated Mines Company is now under way. An east crosscut, designed to intersect the big main vein 300 feet from the shaft, has been started, and a west drift will be commenced in a few days. Work is also to be resumed in the west crosscut on the 500-foot level.

The Lone Star Consolidated, it is officially announced, will soon resume work in its new No. 2, or main, shaft, which has already been sunk three-compartment size to a depth of 210 feet on its way to the latite-shale contact. Operations continue at the Nelligan shaft on the same property.

Encouraging results continue to be obtained by the Goldfield Oro on the 700 and 800-foot levels. Highly interesting conditions are being revealed in several of the workings, and Manager Manning is well pleased with the outlook for the property. No new developments of importance have occurred in other mines of the district.

Unless present plans miscarry, the Goldfield Great Bend Mining Company will, within the next week or ten days, resume operations on an extensive scale in its vertical shaft, which was sunk to a depth of about 500 feet in the early days of Goldfield. Large bodies of excellent rock were disclosed on the various levels of the property in the early operations, and it is the plan of the present management to unwater the shaft and continue development.

From "Mrs. Taxpayer."

LOS ANGELES, May 29.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Thank goodness, someone over the signature of an "Old Timer" has at last come forward with a pertinent question, "What does become of the taxes?" That query has been in my mind a long time, but being a mere woman I have hesitated to pioneer in that direction. Isn't there some way to compel the dispenser of public funds to make a public accounting for the same?

To an observer, who is not familiar with the intricacies of City Hall proceedings, it would seem that most of our taxes go to pay the salaries of commissions created to watch and interfere with other commissions created for the same purpose.

Another little protest I wish to register, though I know it will be effort wasted, is the repeal of the poll-tax law.

Now, on the eve of election, do the people want a man for Mayor who has systematically soaked them for every conceivable assessment it was in his power to levy or uphold?

Of course, the present incumbents want him because they can twist him around their fingers, and his well-known propensity for flopping is due, no doubt, to the various twists they give him. Please, Mr. Taxpayer, wake up!

A MRS. TAXPAYER.

For the Jitneys.

LOS ANGELES, May 28.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Prior to the date when jitney busses started operation in this city 50 per cent. of the working class of people were compelled to stand up or hang on in some manner, both morning and night, going to and from work on the street cars.

After that time we saw good service on the lines where the jitney busses were in operation and everybody gets a seat, but the unfortunate ones who live on the lines where there are no busses are still compelled to hang to straps as before. This, of course, goes to show that competition was what was needed to get better service.

It is very true that the jitney bus should be regulated, made to pay their share, pro rata, toward the upkeep of the roads and to carry a reasonable insurance for the protection of the passengers.

But if we do vote "no" on the initiative jitney-bus ordinance, June 1, what assurances have we that the electric railway company will supply ample cars and a proper schedule, so that we may have a seat coming and going, as we should, instead of hanging on like we did before the advent of the jitney bus?

The way out is simple enough and Glendale and Tropico should not, and undoubtedly will not, be found wanting in a willingness to do all that could possibly be expected of them toward carrying out the new boulevard scheme.

This City's Part.

The completion of this boulevard means a whole lot more to Los Angeles than most people realize. This city in not paying more attention to the project, has been missing an opportunity not only for bringing here the trade of a host of persons who now stay away, but for building up a vast and sightly district that has been too long neglected. There is no more naturally beautiful section in Los Angeles than that back of Edendale.

If this proposed boulevard were in existence and if one might stretch his imagination so far as to conceive also that there were a new route of some kind through Bunker Hill, it will be seen that the entire traffic and travel from the lower end of the San Fernando Valley and all the region in between would now inevitably be pouring through Lake Shore avenue and through tunnels or open cuts into that portion of the business district north of Third street. Subtract from the imaginative element the idea that a hill opening existed, and it will be realized that this same traffic, with such a boulevard outlet, would now be pouring into Sixth street. Los Angeles should certainly do its share in the boulevard project.

It goes without saying that the districts most directly benefited should bear a considerable share of the cost burden. There is no good reason why they should escape. It would not be right or sensible, however, to expect them to form a special assessment district to take care of the entire enterprise, a method that is all too frequently followed in improvements of general benefit.

It is the intention of the Fact and Comment man that these observations should be considered both as an argument for the boulevard enterprise itself and for the principle of the equitable distribution of the cost of public improvements. The fair and just plan will be the best one to follow in this vitally important undertaking and in all others of its character. Let's have this boulevard as soon as possible.

"GET TOGETHER" MEETING.

Members of Los Angeles Realty Board to Install New Officers and Hear Convention Plans Thursday.

The members of the Los Angeles Realty Board have decided to make their regular weekly luncheon next Thursday the occasion of one of the greatest "get together" gatherings in the history of the organization. The Alexandria Hotel has been selected as the place of meeting.

All the officers chosen at the annual election of last Thursday will be formally installed at the meeting and reports will be read by the president, secretary and treasurer. The real feature of the event, however, will be the reports of the different chairmen of committees in charge of the June convention arrangements.

An effort is being made to have practically the entire membership of the board on hand.

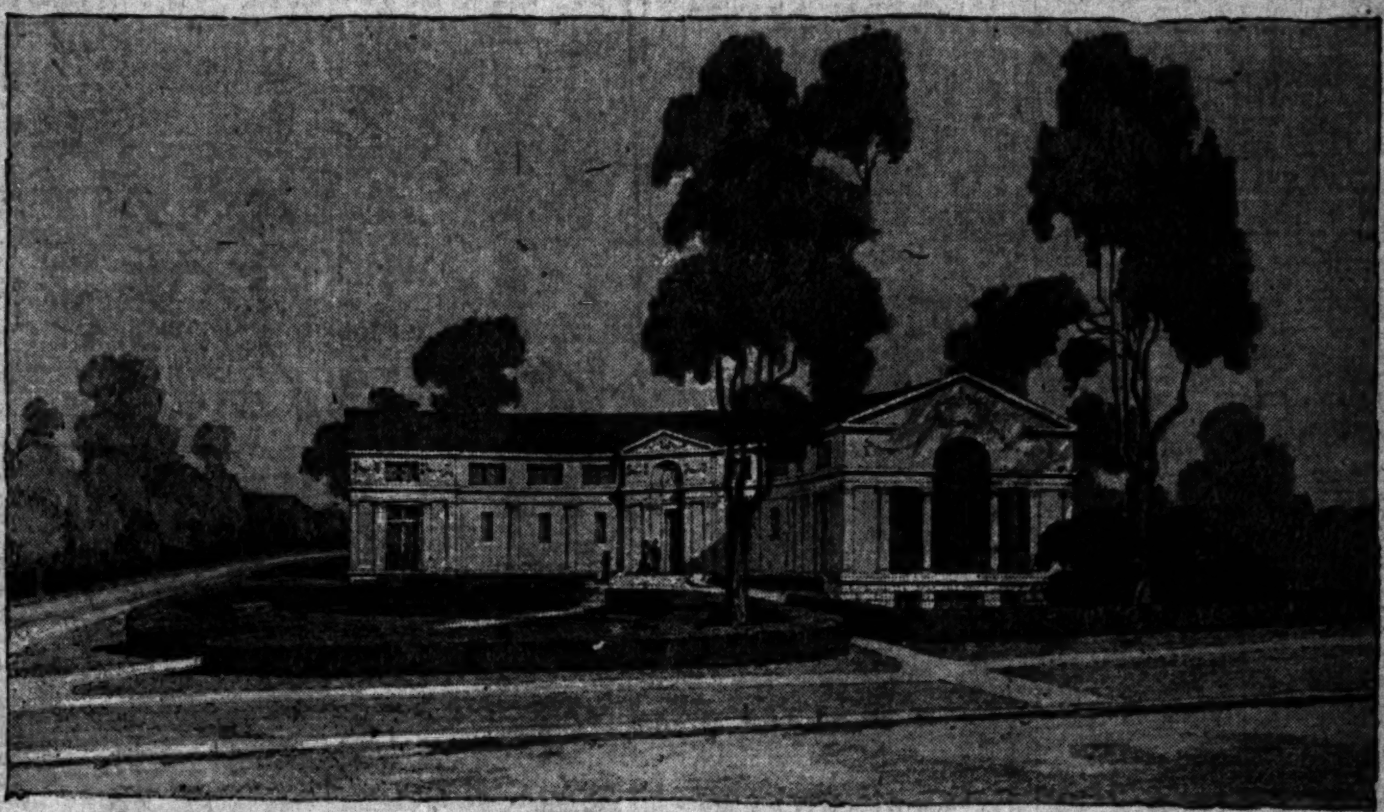
Beautiful Italian Renaissance Edifice for East Los Angeles.



Accepted design for new branch library at Workman avenu e and Avenue Twenty-six.

Plans for the building are now being prepared by Lester H. Hibbard and H. B. Cody, who received the commission to handle the project as the result of a competition entered into by a number of architects and designers.

SCIENTISTS PLAN FINE EDIFICE.

FIFTH CHURCH TO BUILD STATELY HOUSE OF WORSHIP IN HOLLYWOOD.

To the list of stately edifices erected by the Christian Science denomination in Los Angeles is soon to be added another fine structure, the large house of worship projected by the Fifth Church of Christ, Scientist, in Hollywood. Plans for the building have just been completed by Frank Meline, who will also have supervision over the construction.

The church will stand at the northwest corner of Hollywood boulevard and La Brea avenue and will be of classic architecture. The structure will have hollow tile walls, plastered with white cement, the columns and ornamental details being in artificial stone. The interior finish will be in mahogany. The cost of the building is estimated at $38,000.

A feature that will contribute both to the attractiveness and convenience of the church will be the large classic portico across the front. This handsome entrance detail will have a floor space of 1240 feet. Opening from it will be a foyer twenty feet wide, and forty feet long. The main auditorium will have a seating capacity of 1000. The building will also contain a directors' room, two waiting rooms, two readers' rooms, a room for the organist, a room for soloists and thirty-five Sunday-school class rooms.

MODELED AFTER ITALIAN TYPES.

NEW LIBRARY WILL SUGGEST FAMOUS VILLA.

Carnegie Branch Structure on East Side to Incorporate Many Interesting Details, Including Circular Reading-room and Outdoor Features.

From a number of competitive plans submitted by various local architects, the Los Angeles Public Library Board selected yesterday the design of Architect Lester H. Hibbard for the new $30,000 library building to be erected at the southeast corner of Workman avenue and Avenue 26. The cost of the structure, which will be known as the East Los Angeles branch library, will be met from the Carnegie fund that was secured a few years ago, and will be exclusive of the outlay for the site, which has been purchased by an assessment district.

Mr. Hibbard and H. B. Cody, who is associated with him in the project, have chosen as a model for the new East Side library the famous Villa Papa Gulia near Rome, one of the most beautiful examples of Italian Renaissance architecture in existence. The building will be of brick construction and will have stucco exterior facing. The trim and ornamentation will be of artificial stone, and the roof of red clay tile.

The structure has been so planned as to fit into an attractive formal garden scheme and will have the shape of a quarter-circle, with its concave edge toward the outside corner of the lot. Each of the end pavilions will be set about thirty feet back from its street front and will have its own entrance. The main entrance will be from the street intersection, the approach being from a wide walk bordered by lawn and suitable planting.

Back of the building the space will be utilized for a novel open-air reading garden, being closed in by an ornamental lattice fence and provided with pergolas and other shelters to insure shade. In the center of the garden it is planned to put a pool surrounded by stone benches. The size of the site, which is 126 feet square, will permit of quite a comprehensive plan.

The main reading-room of the library will be 110x26 feet in extreme dimensions and will conform to the curve of the ground plan. Opening from it will be the offices of the librarian, a reference-room, stackroom and restroom. The provision for lighting will be a feature in itself, owing to the fact that most of the windows directly opening into the reading spaces will be set close to the ceiling, an arrangement that will tend to neutralize the glare from the outside. The west pavilion will be arranged for an open-air reading loggia.

The basement will be high and will contain a lecture-room provided with a stage and having a seating capacity of 300. There will be direct access to this room from both the inside and outside of the building. Immediately adjoining will be a children's "story hour" room. From the packing-room on the same floor level a book elevator shaft will rise to the librarian's office. The heating plant of the building will occupy the remaining basement space.

FOR SOUTH HOOVER.

Permit Granted for Fifty-room Brick Apartment-house—Large Flats to be Started This Week.

The city building department issued a permit yesterday for the construction of a three-story brick apartment-house projected by Sherwood Allen at No. 1548 South Hoover street. The building, which will cost about $25,000, will contain fifty rooms in two, three and four-room apartments and will occupy a triangular site with extreme dimensions of 117x94 feet.

A. V. Perkinson will start work this week on a large frame flat building at No. 1509 Bonita place. The structure will contain two six-room flats and two four-room suites and will cost about $6000. The front will be faced with plaster.

OVER A MILLION.

Because tomorrow is a holiday, the month officially came to an end yesterday in the offices of the city building department, the May construction records being considered complete on Friday evening. Six hundred and nineteen permits in all were issued by the department for new structures of every kind during the month, these calling for improvements to cost in the aggregate $1,168,983. Yesterday morning's business in the department will be added to the June totals.

THREE CONFESS TO DOZEN BURGLARIES

SUSPECTED "FENCE" ALSO PUT IN JAIL—ALL VICTIMS ARE GROCERS.

Confessing, according to the police, to looting twelve grocery stores during the past month, three Mexicans were arrested yesterday afternoon by Plainclothesmen Rico and Williams. The trio gave their names as John Perales, Jose Sepulveda and Frank Alvarado. They said they disposed of the stolen goods to A. Juarez of No. 622 North Broadway, and he, too, was locked in the City Jail.

The burglars said they always went to a prospective "job" with a one-horse wagon and if they succeeded in getting into the store, filled the vehicle and drove to the store of Juarez. The police say the loot was worth about $1500.

Frank Alvarado, Jr., and Julius Moore were also implicated in the confession and they are sought. It is said Alvarado was shot the other night when he tried to enter a store at No. 637 South Soto street.

LOT ON GRAND BETWEEN SEVENTEENTH AND EIGHTEENTH BRINGS BIG PRICE

W. I. Hollingsworth & Co. report the sale of forty-one and one-half feet of frontage on the west side of Grand avenue, adjoining the alley between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets, for a given consideration of $750 a front foot. The purchaser, Mary H. Spires, representing the J. H. Spires estate, will hold the property as an investment.

The same firm reports the sale of three lots at the southeast corner of Seventy-third street and Vermont avenue, and fifty feet on Moneta avenue, between Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth streets, to R. C. Cushing; the sale of fourteen lots in the Broadmore and Thompson Tracts, in Glendale, including two residences, to E. Conde Jones, of Pasadena, for a consideration of $30,000, and the sale of the Lomelita Apartments at No. 3846 South Grand avenue, a thirty-room frame bungalow type building, to Mrs. Daisy M. Degelman, for Mary M. Shultz, at a given consideration of $30,000.

ELDERLY VETERAN TAKES OWN LIFE.

DRAWS MONEY AND MORTGAGES FROM BANK FOR SAKE OF HIS WIDOW.

After telling his wife he would be ready for lunch promptly at noon, George W. Wilson, 68 years old, Past Commander of Robley D. Evans Post, G.A.R., went to the basement of the Le Mars apartment-house, No. 811 Temple street, and shot himself through the head. His lifeless body was found an hour later.

Police Detective Fitzgerald made an investigation of the case and in searching the man's clothing found a wallet containing $731 in currency and several mortgages. Mrs. Wilson believes he drew the money from a bank earlier in the day so she would have no trouble in getting it after his death. For several weeks, she said, he acted strangely.

Mr. Wilson came to Los Angeles six years ago from Le Mars, Iowa, and engaged in the brokerage and real estate business with an office in the Union Oil Building. He owned the apartment-house in which he lived, having named it after his native city. He leaves a widow, and a daughter who lives in Michigan. Mr. Wilson was a veteran of the Civil War.

HONORS HANDED TO "AD" PEOPLE.

OFFICERS ELECTED AND MANY TROPHIES AWARDED.

Spokane Picked for Next Meeting Place of Pacific Coast Association—Spanish Barbecue Whets Apetites for Mission Play in the Evening—Go South Today.

The delegates to the Pacific Coast Advertising Men's Association enjoyed a varied programme yesterday. After a business session in the forenoon in Normal Hall, the rest of the day was devoted to pleasure. The visitors were taken for a motor car ride early in the afternoon. At 4:30 p.m. they enjoyed a Spanish barbecue at Scheutzen Park and attended the "Mission Play" at San Gabriel in the evening.

At the business session Spokane was designated as the next meeting place for the convention and these officers were elected: President, F. H. Lloyd, Spokane; first vice-president, C. F. Berg, Portland; second vice-president, T. A. Cody, Sacramento; third vice-president, Stanley Hall, San Diego; secretary, Dr. E. R. Emerson, Portland; and members of Executive Committee, R. L. Bisby of Los Angeles (chairman,) C. H. Tallant of San Francisco, R. A. B. Aiken of Seattle, W. W. Cribbens of Oakland and A. H. Wilkins of Los Angeles.

Another interesting feature of the business session was the awarding of the trophies. The Spokane Ad Club won the Coast trophy, donated by G. Herbert Palin, and given by the Los Angeles Ad Club to the club showing the greatest activity during the past year. The Committee on Awards based their decision on attendance at the convention, work done in behalf of the profession of advertising, vigilance committee work and educational work among members.

The president's trophy, awarded by the president to the delegation that shows the largest percentage of attendance at the convention, was captured by the Spokane Ad Club. The delegation from the Sacramento Ad Club won the Hotel Clark trophy, offered to the delegation that registered the greatest mileage. The Los Angeles trophy, donated by G. INVESTIGATE
THE ADVANTAGES FOR SUCCESS IN OUR NORTH WHITTIER HEIGHTS
LEMON, ORANGE, AHUACATE AND WALNUT
LAND SUBDIVISION,
THEN COMPARE

The essential conditions of soil, water, climate and location for markets, to be had at North Whittier Heights with the older Whittier-La Habra foothill citrus district, in which there have probably been more people who have gained an independent income in following horticultural and agricultural pursuits with a minimum number of failures than on any other spot of ground of equal size in the whole of the United States, and possibly in all the world. We are confident that if you are open to conviction and you are looking for a land investment which will bring the largest returns on the capital invested with a minimum amount of labor, as well as the most ideal location for a country home, you, too, will decide to invest in this choice subdivision, as many of the older citrus growers of the Whittier-La Habra district have done.

The property is being sold in planted and unplanted tracts of 5 to 50 acres, and on easy terms, if desired. We will also contract to plant or care for groves for those who desire to have us do so. Prospective buyers shown the property by auto any day. Call, phone or write for full information and beautifully illustrated descriptive folder.

Jules Mendel,
A Prosperity and Trade contestant, in his "working clothes" at the Regal Theater.

FOUR WEEKS MORE OF BIG CONTEST.

It is only four weeks until the end of the Prosperity and Trade Contest. Four weeks from last night at exactly 6 o'clock, the contest officially closes. On the stroke of 6 the doors will shut, and not another credit of any amount will be accepted. Therefore, it behooves everyone to collect everything that friends are gathering for them and have them at the contest office in ample time.

We hope the contestants will gradually begin to bring in the undated credits which they may be holding back, so we will not be altogether swamped at the last. After the last credit has been turned in, then will begin the recount of all the totals by the judges, which will require several days. Then, no later than a week after the close of the contest, the winners will be announced and the prizes awarded.

During these last four weeks, the competition will be very keen, and it is the duty of everyone interested in the ultimate success of the contest to keep a cool head and a brave heart and know for a surety that the management is equally interested in each contestant and wish from the bottom of their hearts that every single one could win the capital pirze.

We would suggest that from this time until the conclusion of the contest, each contestant follow conscientiously the following suggestions:

Ask all the questions you wish, but not about your competitor's affairs.

Watch carefully the Special Credit notices in the Contest Office.

Never forget for a moment that the Contest Manager does not play favorites, and that each contestant receives exactly the same treatment.

We have been greatly pleased of late to notice the increased interest the merchants are taking in the contest—just exactly what we have been wanting them to do all along. During the last few days our office force has been kept busy showing our wonderful store room to visiting co-operating merchants.

Among these visitors was Walter E. Smith, grocer, who expressed himself as positively amazed at the indisputable results of the Contest, as demonstrated by our overflowing storeroom. Mr. Joannes, of the Ben Hur goods, is a frequent visitor at the Contest Office, and each time his wonder grows at the steadily increasing mountain of Ben Hur cans and labels. P. A. Kelly of the Globe Mills occasionally drops in, and each time finds it more difficult to express his amazement at the number of A1 flour sacks the contestants have brought in. Henry Laub of the Old Plantation Distilling Company comes in often and is pleased to find that his pile of credit slips grows steadily each day. The Citizens' Trust and Savings Bank officials do not find it necessary to come in so often, for they are able to keep an accurate check on every dollar of new business the contest brings them—and are kept busy doing that.

In the course of time they all get in to see us, and we are more than glad to welcome them, and hope they will continue to come more and more often.

The Prosperity and Trade Contest Office will be closed all day tomorrow, Memorial Day, but will be open bright and early Tuesday morning, and we expect we will have to call for volunteers to help count the credits which will come in that day.

This has been a peculiar campaign. The hopes of candidates have risen and fallen alternately. Human sympathy has been a more potent factor than any other one element.

And in politics sympathy doesn't last long. The campaign has been emotional, hysterical, sensational, vindictive, revengeful. Mostly it has been emotional.

But when the voter starts to the polls his blood becomes cold and when he is left alone with his conscience and a rubber stamp he descends from the heights of emotionalism to the level of practical reasoning. Upon the choice of candidates he lingers, finally makes up his mind and stamps impulsively. He may vote for the man for whom he has the greatest sympathy, or he is just as apt to vote for some one else, still sympathising for the other fellow.

Only a few of our well-chosen citizens actually believed that Charlie Sebastian would poll more votes at the primary than Mr. Whiffen. My barber wouldn't even give the Chief a place on the ticket; at the cigar stand I was informed that Mr. Criswell and Mr. Whiffen would be high men; on the street car the conductor and motorman said that a "lot of women were" going to vote for Sebastian, but he wouldn't land.

The high vote received by Chief Sebastian at that time bred a new crop of I-told-you-so's, but very little money was won by any of these.

Now the situation is reversed. Very few people think that Mr. Whiffen has a chance of being elected. Most of those who do are sitting up nights trying to kid themselves into this belief. They have nothing but hope upon which to base their belief. There is no real enthusiasm for Mr. Whiffen.

The cocksureness noticed at Whiffen headquarters before the primary, was dissipated immediately thereafter. The shakeup in the organization that followed did not electrify the community and old Gen. Apathy took charge. The current belief that Mr. Whiffen was a longhair led the organization to make a deal with the saloon-keepers and an indorsement of Mr. Whiffen by the organization followed. The saloon men wanted something. They asked Mr. Whiffen if he would assist in extending the zone and lowering the license. Mr. Whiffen says he declined to do either. Notwithstanding, he was indorsed, collections were made among the saloons and his name was passed over the bar.

Later on, however, the saloon men became afflicted with an acute case of cold feet. The symptoms were noticeable when the retail men's organization split. Still later, Mr. Whiffen's campaign moved into another distinct phase. He attacked his former boss. The case of Mr. Whiffen vs. Earl gave the press agents a great deal of extra work and probably made some votes for Mr. Whiffen, but most of the people had not forgotten how consistently he flipped and flopped when orders came from the vicinity of the Union Oil building.

Toward the close of the campaign Mr. Whiffen's stock rose rapidly. It could not have descended below the point where it rested immediately after the primaries. I don't believe he can be elected, although the longer the campaign lasts the more strength he will gather because the sympathetic backing of his opponent is not composed of durable fabric. I have no sympathy with these hedgers who say that "if the election was two weeks off" Mr. Whiffen would win. How does any one know that?

It isn't very often that The Watchman bores his readers with his own prediction on the outcome, because if subsequent events prove him to have been wrong, he looks like a flivver the day after. But the best guess on the result of Tuesday's little voting bee is that Chief Sebastian will be elected easily.

To be frank about it, there is a great deal of apathy over the Whiffen candidacy. The total vote will not be 50 per cent. of the total registration, according to present indications. For one thing, a great many persons are dissatisfied with the Mayoralty situation. Then, too, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday will be holidays for thousands of persons who will not forsake even a part of this vacation for a chance to visit the polls.

Chief Sebastian has an almost united support from the churches. Peculiarly enough, he is assured of at least half of the so-called liquor vote and a big share of the liberal vote. The German-Americans, the cafe and restaurant men, most of the automobile and taxicab men and several other elements in our liberal population have accepted him, while women's clubs, religious bodies, business and professional men are working hard for him. Outside of these organizations there is a great vote based on sympathy.

His organization has remained intact; his campaign east of Main street has been vigorous and effective; in the western and southwestern portions and out Hollywood way he has won votes wherever he appeared.

It is difficult to explain the spontaneity with which the Sebastian candidacy is greeted nearly everywhere he presses his claims, but the fact remains that he has grown stronger instead of weaker and that he looms on the eve of election as the very probable winner.

The Council race is mussed up. So many tickets are in the field and so many organizations have dipped into the contest that the rivalry has become very keen. Councilmen Conwell, Betkouski, Langdon and Wheeler are almost certain to be re-elected, while there is an element of doubt hovering over the candidacies of Councilmen Roberts and Williams. Mr. Roberts is a weak candidate and a weaker campaigner. His name does not appear on many of the tickets that carry the names of his colleagues and he will suffer considerably from this. Mr. Williams, who, by the way, is George Williams, is expected to suffer by reason of the fact that two opponents bear the same name. The primary vote showed that Councilman Williams lost votes because of this confusion. He has made a fine record in the Council and should be returned. He is beset on the one hand with a jitney bus candidate and on the other with a Socialist. Many persons are apt to vote for either of these under the mistaken opinion that they are voting for the incumbent Williams.

The next Council is very likely to have a woman answering to roll call. Mrs. Foltz and Mrs. Lindsey are making good campaigns. Both appear on many tickets and there is a reciprocal relation between them and many of the male candidates, owing to the important fact that they are women.

On the whole, the next Council will be a very good one.

NATURE SHOW BY CHILDREN.

GOPHERS, DEAD CATS, SNAKES AND OTHER THINGS.

School Pupils Hold Their Third Annual Exhibit—Many Forms of Sea and Animal Life are Shown. Increases Study of the Great Outdoors.

The tanned skin of an unfortunate cat, animals of all kinds dead and alive, marine life, wild and tame flowers, and nature pictures vied together yesterday afternoon at the Grand-avenue school in the third annual nature study contest of the students of 134 elementary schools in this city. Every exhibit was the product of the small naturalists, and demonstrated beyond argument that if a child is interested in the work at hand, wonders may be accomplished.

The nature study course of the elementary schools was instigated primarily to teach the child the beauties of the great outdoors. Expanding, it developed so that today the students have turned it into a useful study, making many articles out of the things which heretofore have been considered a necessary evil or a total loss to nature.

Three years ago the contest originated. Prizes are offered each year, awarded by three competent judges. The judges for this contest were Hector Alliot of the Southwest Museum, F. S. Daggett of the County Museum, and Robert Wagner.

Included in the exhibits were several fearfully and wonderfully made articles. Gopher skins, tanned by the young students, decorated the walls of one room. In the center of these skins, was the dried covering that once was worn by a cat. The cat is said to have argued with a trolley car one day, and was discarded as being of no further use by its owners. But a youngster of the Western-avenue school thought otherwise, and as a result, its tanned skin won second prize of its class.

Probably the strangest of all exhibits was a family of three snakes, very much alive, cared for and petted by the small youngsters of the Santa Barbara-avenue school. The youthful owners seemed not at all frightened by the reptiles, and handled them freely.

Houses of Glass

In awaking that morning Norris was again visited with his dread of the previous day, that Ethel should hear of Myra's installment in his cottage before he had an opportunity to tell her. This troubled him so that he ate no breakfast, but hurried to his office, trusting the exactions of his business to take his mind from the annoying thought. He had a violent headache by 11 o'clock, and, attributing it to the fact that he had neglected his breakfast, went to an early lunch. That was why, when Ethel called him at 11:30 o'clock, he was out. His lunch gave him immediate relief, and he felt a thrill of confidence in himself and the rightness of things in general; an assurance, an optimistic outlook most of us have been conscious of after a dinner that leaves nothing in the way of food to be desired. He tried to analyze this sense of buoyancy as he walked along back to his office, and thought of the presumptuous conceit of man in fancying himself fine, spiritual, aspiring, when, his material appetite satisfied, he turned urgently to the pursuit of "better" things. He saw he had allowed himself for a moment to grow misanthropic—a thing unfair to the beauty of the day—a thing unfair to those fine stirrings which perfection in any form—beauty—always made on him, and he laughed his cynicism completely to rout.

He bought an "extra" from a newsboy, folded it carelessly under his arm, and ascended to his office. As he threw the sheet on his desk it fell face upward, and the words "Attorneys' wife is co-respondent in divorce suit," staring out at him in big black type, stretched clear across the page. Maybe it was someone he knew. He took the sheet up and carefully read the subheadings, "Mrs. Willard Fall" ('Fall!' he gasped) "charges she found Mrs. Ray Norris and Mr. Fall embracing——"

The sheet fell from his nerveless fingers and he swallowed hard a few times to moisten his throat and mouth, which had suddenly become dry. Then came a reaction from his nerveless unrealization; he felt a weak shaking throughout his whole body, and was conscious of his heart pulsing in great, uneven jumps. The monstrousness, the bold assurance of that staring type was incredible. It was hideous, foul. His wife and Fall! Why, they hardly knew one another! He tried to understand it—tried to put his thoughts in the same consecutive order he always had them when he pleaded a case in court. The effort was not successful, but he got sufficient control of his reason to look back broadly over the events of the last few days.

The one event that distinguished the last few days from a year of happy uneventful marriage was Ethel's insistent, hysterical demand to send Myra Foster away from his office. In explanation she had expressed an unwilling doubt (a doubt nevertheless) that his relations with the girl were all they should be. He knew his relations with Myra Foster were simple, honest, businesslike, and that thought, combined with his wife's suspicion, suggested toh im insidiously, but certainly, that her suspicion of him might be but a blind for her relations with Fall. Good God, what a hideous thought! He picked up his phone receiver, clicked the hook nervously many times, and, after what seemed an unusual wait, was connected with his home.

"Hello, Mrs. Norris, please. This is Mr. Norris."

"Mrs. Norris is not in, sir. She left full an hour and a half ago, and left word she had gone to the beach cottage. Yes. Good-by."

She had gone to the beach—a place he could never prevail on her to visit! Why? Had she heard of Myra Foster being there? He knew gossip could travel as fast, and faster, than that. But, if she was using his relations with Myra Foster as a blind to cover her own affairs(this damnable thought kept persisting,) if she were, was it possible that she would have the temerity to seize on Myra's presence in the cottage as justification of a suspicion she knew to be false? He cursed himself for his vile suspicions. But she had gone to the beach! If not for that, then for what?

The thought of Fall then entered his mind and took his whole attention, and he glanced hastily, searchingly across the court to see whether he was in his office. If this frightful thing were true—— His lips met in a long, hard seam as he unlocked the bottom drawer of his desk and, without looking, hastily withdrew something and slipped it into his pocket. He rose, desperate, and, leaving his office, crossed to Fall's.

Fall was not there. He questioned the porter.

"When will Fall be in?"

"I don't know, Mr. Norris. Left word he had gone to the beach, but didn't leave no message when he'd be back again."

Ray started, shocked at the advice that Fall had gone to the beach. He said "all right' in a preoccupied voice that seemed even to him not to have emanated from his own throat, and walked unsteadily away, "a sorta quiet, wild look," as the porter afterwards told, "on his face." It was all very clear to him now—her subtle trickery under the mask of "injured innocence"—Fall with his unspeakable reputation—their discovery in a compromising position by Mrs. Fall, and the resultant divorce suit—and now both of them together at the beach.

Had the insanity which now possessed him taken a violent form he might have been apprehended and prevented from doing any harm; but it was visible only in his crafty eyes and unnaturally quiet bearing as he jumped into his auto and started for the coast.

Fall had seen the "extra" before Norris, and his wife's drastic action had made him suddenly afraid. He "sipped from every flower" and recked not the cost; but this thing, copied by all the papers throughout the land might, and very probably would, ruin him. He felt particularly aggrieved in that for the thing he was about to be punished, he was entirely innocent.

He took an early train for the beach where he endeavored to placate his wife and make her withdraw her charge; but she had ceased to think of him as a postive quantity, and was unmoved by his appeals.

When Ethel arrived, she went straight to her cottage, which she found deserted. Myra and her father had gone to the shore. She drew in her breath sharply as her anxious eyes, after searching the living-room for signs of its new occupant, fell on a large, floppy straw hat flung carelessly on a chair. She picked it up, and examined it eagerly, her essential feminine blinding her for the moment to its indication, and causing her to wonder what he could see in that; then realizing its significance she dashed it fiercely to the ground and started for the coast. She walked quickly, tirelessly in the soft sand, and was startled when, after a sharp turn round a ledge of rock, she came upon Willard Fall. He was sobered by his wife's refusal to listen to his entreaties, and was as dejected as his trivial nature would allow. He lifted his hat.

"Good afternoon, Mrs. Norris. Thought you didn't like the seashore."

"Howdyedo, Mr. Fall. Oh, I come down occasionally."

"I've wanted ever since that frightful day, to let you know how sorry I am that you should have been placed in such an unfortunate position."

He said nothing, however, of the divorce suit, thinking she must already know. She wanted to be rid of him—wanted to fly on wildly—wanted to find them—wanted and feared to—feared every step that took her eager, urgent feet further and further along the limitless stretch of beach. He kept on talking, solicitously trying his utmost to assure her of his regret, all unconscious that her tortured, anxious, fearful mind was intent on another topic, and that she grasped not a word that he uttered.

Racing, careening madly down the beach came Norris's auto, its flying wheels sending up a swish of sand in their wake. It stopped within a few yards of them, and Norris, a strange, wild expression on his face, jumped out. He had seen them half a mile off, and the sight of them together changed his crafty, quiet look to one of terrible rage. Dashing wildly up to where they stood, he thrust the frightful headline under Ethel's eyes, his face twitching in frightful contortions.

"Is it true? Is it true? Is it—" he gurgled chokingly.

Ethel's eyes took in the glaring headline, and followed down to the subhead. She started back, gasping, realizing fully that what she had dreaded had come to pass—that he had learned from another source what she had not the courage to tell him—that he had doubted her as she him—that it was all a hideous misunderstanding fed on by Gossip—and that the man before her was a raving maniac.

Fall had edged off. But Norris, watching her, needed no answer, her startled gasp as she shrank back convicting her utterly.

His hand went deep in his pocket, and when he wheeled and raised his arm there was a short sharp flash, and Fall dropped in the sand. He rose, and with faltering steps started like a drunken man toward a cliff overlooking the sea. Stumbling, falling, desperately rising, he made his way up through the rocks to the cliff's top, as Ethel wrestled frantically with the madman before her.

He broke loose from her clutching fingers, and again raising his arm, pointed it toward the cliff's summit where Fall tottered. Another shot—a sickening splash—and the softly lapping, halcyon waters of the Pacific closed over the dead body of Willard Fall.

Slimy Scandal, born of Doubt and Misunderstanding, had come into its own Lives were ruined; lives were ended. Because a woman couldn't hold her tongue the penalty was paid—paid—paid

Norris kills Fall and slimy scandal has claimed its victim.

FRENCH MEDAILLES.

A consignment of medailles, made and sold under the control of the Touring Club of France, has been received in Los Angeles. They will be sold by Maurice Fog, No. 108 Commercial street, for the benefit of French soldiers. The emblem of the medaille is the French gun of '75. Fifty thousand of the medailles were sold in San Francisco. The price is 25 cents. "Every Frenchman or sympathizer of France should be glad to contribute this small sum," says Mr. Fog. "The medaille is a precious token."

WAR BABIES.

BY ALMA WHITAKER.

The spiritual lords of the British empire have just concluded their sitting on war babies. As a London journal remarks, their lordships have sat on seemlier subjects.

And reading said London journals, one does observe that there is a feverish interest in war babies just now and none so eloquently informing and decisive as the intuitive male. It appears that they have just begun to arrive and the crop is one of the biggest in centuries.

It is a problem that all sorts and conditions of people regard it as their bounden duty to settle. The moral rectitude of England demands that a suitable attitude of shocked decorum be worn when the subject is approached. It is the sort of thing that nice people don't think about and, even when all the proprieties of the church and state have been duly recognized, babies are considered rotten form for drawing-room conversation.

However, on this occasion the babies mean to be heard. I received seven English papers in the last mail and they all devote much space to the elucidation of the problem. Suggestions go all the way from a stern, old-fashioned moral discountenance, with proper condemnation and reproof, to a state bonus for mothers, an allowance of five shillings a week for maintenance, and a civil medal of some kind, betokening the gratitude of the nation.

And, of course, a committee is to be appointed to sit on them again. An official state committee this time, prepared to come to some wise and definite conclusions.

The church, especially the Archbishop of Canterbury, is feeling a little hurt. Only half their advice has been taken, which is always so annoying. At the outset of the war the Archbishop rose in his majesty and proclaimed that marriages would be free, gratis and for nothing, bans would be suspended, and blushing brides were recommended to consummate the marriage for the benefit of their country and posterity.

With marriage so easy and so cheap, the service seemed hardly worth having. Indeed, it seemed a certain somewhat indelicate advertisement of one's modest services to one's country. The English way is to do one's bit uncomplainingly, silently, nobly, asking no specific recognition, craving no ostentatious publicity. So, regrettable as it may appear, many thousands of young people, both sexes, omitted the initial hint as regards matrimony, and now the church and state don't quite know what to do about it.

The most refreshing thing about the controversy is that it is handled as though this was the very first time in the history of a nation that such an unfortunate problem has presented itself. One would imagine that the formality of marriage had never before been overlooked. It is a question to be met like submarines and aeroplanes and asphyxiating gases, the like of which has never presented itself before. Which naturally makes us feel that for all her centuries of history, Brittania is very inexperienced.

Apparently an unsanctified war baby is a much greater problem than an unsanctified peace baby. At all events, the poor little wretches are being sat on interminably by all sorts of self-appointed committees and something special is going to happen to them.

As one journal points out, the war has already suspended Christianity, party politics, magna charta, habeas corpus, free speech and liberty of the press, so why be finicky about suspending a few rules on behalf of the war babies?

England dislikes originality, especially in the matter of morals, but she is having to endure such a number of very original innovations just now that one more won't make much difference.

It is going to be very exacting to maintain an attitude of righteous disgust, especially, as is quite possible, most of the babies are quite normal mighty atoms, possible good citizens and brave soldiers, embryo heroes and heroines ready for the next war. It is not going to make things any more comfortable or workable by ignoring them as improper persons who do not officially exist.

Especially as they will probably all have votes, even their mammas, if the suffragettes' optimism is warranted.

It is most generally conceded that it is a time to be kind. Gentle but firm. Unmarried mothers must be made to feel that disapproval is theirs, but not too harshly, you understand. The idea that these babies are the sons of national heroes who have nobly given their lives to their country, leaving this trifling legacy behind, must be borne in mind but the legacy must be viewed with a certain dispassionate criticism—the gift horse may, on this occasion, be looked in the mouth with a certain propriety.

Of course, it would not do for the mothers to be accepted in good society. They must be kept in their place. A special code of etiquette will have to be designed for them; there must be some method of according them civil but chilly treatment; something on the lines that the average Britisher reserves for his menials. This seems to be the view of the spiritual lords. Reading between the lines of the report of the convention, one feels that separate pews will have to be provided for them in church.

Indeed, still reading between the lines, one does feel that the church's chief complaint about these voluntary mammas was that they were not spry enough. They exhibited a painful disregard of modern scientific knowledge. They showed quite plainly that they had all the necessary information at their finger tips in peace time, yet they wantonly fail to use it in a crisis, when it would have been eminently desirable. The average woman is inclined to agree with them. Perhaps, had the spiritual lords numbered a few carefully chosen women among their number, a solution of the problem would have been reached ere now.

As it is the war babies are arriving and no settlement regarding their proper treatment has been decided upon. Unless church and State promptly come to some definite decision, numerous well meaning but ill-advised people will be giving them a kindly reception and treating them like ordinary human beings, thus permitting themselves an inflated idea of their own importance like any ordinary baby.

After all, it is well to remember that maternity is still a desirable vocation for woman, notwithstanding the numerous other openings that have recently been filling her horizon. Moreover, it is an illpaid one for the most part, and if the State can see its way to make it more attractive in any way, it might be a good idea to give it another chance. Certain preliminary conventions seem desirable, of course, but when women are to be found willing to embark on this special kind of useful labor, red tape will obviously have to be restricted to very narrow limits.

Of course, the training of large bodies of troops in certain regions may be taken as the government's own method of encouraging the profession; they ought to stick to their guns and shoulder half the responsibility.

FOR WOMEN AND MEN.

Facts, Features and Fancies.

BY OLIVE GRAY.

"EVERYBODY is an advertiser. Everything we do is advertising."

So said one of the speakers at the great advertising convention held during the past week in our city.

I respect advertising most highly, but I had not thought of it in so wide a sense, and yet after all I believe that man spoke the truth.

"Everything we do is advertising." Why, surely! Every move we make advertises the kind of persons we are, every word we say proclaims, even our most secret acts are advertised in the lines of our faces, recorded upon the very palms of our hands, and he who runs may read our inmost character at a single glance.

Terrifying thought, perhaps, and yet most certainly true. The stingy old man with the tight little lines at the corners of the mouth may tell us by the hour of his beneficences and yet there upon his face is advertised the fact that he loves his pence far more than he loves humanity. The woman who assures us that she spends her every hour in thinking about hubby's comfort cannot bury out of sight the furrows which her nagging has plowed into character and face. The two who would not have the world know of their attachment proclaim the story by a single movement of the hands or by a downward glance, and the world reads the word as plainly as it reads the big print in the morning newspapers. And, on the other hand, the kindly hand involuntarily put forth to save a child from falling, the quick warning on the lip, the half-smile of greeting to the unknown neighbor—all as plainly advertise the loveliness of the matured and altruistic soul. We advertise ourselves in our gait, our dress, the kind of homes that we inhabit. We cannot cease from advertising until we cease from breathing, for what is advertising save proclaiming, and we constantly proclaim ourselves by every act of every hour of life.

An Interesting Ad.

I wonder if you noticed, during the convention of the Pacific Advertising Clubs, that advertisement of a big Spring-street clothing house, wherein were comprised advertisements of Franklin's and Lincoln's time, contrasting with advertisements of now? Most interesting and original was the idea, and the greeting to the "adcrafters." I want to tell you a little secret which will make you proud. It was a girl—it was one of us—who wrote that advertisement. It is a girl who is advertising manager of the establishment, which ranks as high as any in its line. Are we not proud of western women?

Garden Gowns.

Time was when gardening was rather a despised art, but now this recreative labor has come into its own. Articles on gardening for women fill the magazines and there is every sort of garden implement done beauty-wise. Now comes the climax in the "garden gown." Adorable is this creation. Of flowered cretonne with convenient pockets and a bag of cretonne to hang upon the arm and a bonnety hat of cretonne, this costume de garden would add charm to any feminine figure. The moment that your glance falls upon that quaint and lovely dress you begin to picture her among her flowers and you fall in love with the thought. In California, especially, we ought to make it a point to live among the sweet, growing garden things, for here it may be an all-year-round recreation to dig and plant, to prune and train the vines and blossoms.

Posie Pots.

That is not what they are intended for, but I would use them thus. I mean those casserolish articles in miniature which are on sale for prices little as themselves. There are quaint, tall marmites of brown pottery enmeshed in silver, and squat mustard pots of similar construction. I think that, while they are, of course, appropriate for their intended use, they would be charming for holding flowers. I always like to see an article transformed from its intended purpose to other and original uses. It seems to give to it added character. One of those tallish marmites filled with zenias in the various shades of yellow—would not that be pretty?

Bright Buttonry.

Upon some of the newest suits of gabardine buttons of bright silver or polished brass are seen. Decidedly are they seen for they are placed in closely set shining rows along the backs of sleeves, up the back seams of coats and skirts, and used as fastenings. They give a cheerful note to somber garments and are quite pleasing.

Gloving the Form.

Did you ever imagine anything like the impertinence of sweaters? From their humble estate of more warmth-givers of worsted yarn they have climbed and climbed to mercerized, to fiber silk, to silk yarn, and now comes the very acme of aristocracy—the sweater of Italian glove silk! Exactly like the silk used in the construction of the summer gloves and of the lovely tinted underwear, are these, and the shades are every whit as dainty! Thus far I have seen them at but a single store—a big one on lower Broadway.

Children's Story Acts.

That theater in a big store on lower Broadway is to be devoted for a while to plays which are founded upon children's stories. A High School girl having a real genius for dramatics has taken charge and there will be a constant feast of dramatic fairy tales for the children visitors at that store, which has done so much to endear itself to the child heart. Just walk one way and save the price of admission.

Cecile Brunner Stationery.

Recalling the traditional "pink note paper," said to most effectively carry the missive of affection, that decorative window in a mid-Broadway jewelry house gives pause to all who pass, causing the fancy of the onlooker to "lightly turn to thoughts of love." Cecile Brunner roses—those love thoughts of the floral world—are used to accent the beauty of this window, emphasizing the coleur de rose as the tint par excellence for love letters.

New Limbert.

Have you seen the new Limbert furniture? It is well worth looking at. Upon the first simple and stately lines of the dignified and comfortable shapes a decorative scheme has been engrafted and the result is something more luxurious and yet altogether harmonious. Inlay of square patterns well in keeping with the shape of the furniture gives a touch of elegance which raises Limbert from its first plain-ness to an even higher plain. Cane has been inset in some of the pieces and to some has been added tapestry cushioning, which lends a still further note of ease to broad-backed lounges and arm chirs. It took genuine art to thus insinuate the newest modern notes to this old favorite, without incongruity.

Needlework Contest.

If you are good at stitchery now is your opportunity to prove it and to secure for yourself one or more of the prizes offered in the art needlework department of that big mid-Broadway store which is thus attempting to raise the standard of such work. All sorts of new and beautiful things to be made and the making made worth your while!

Once-in-Nineteen Wonders.

That wonderful "Once-in-nineteen" sale continues throughout the week with added attractions.

"Distribution."

That is the name used for that great sale of white undermuslins wherein the prices are so low that "distribution" is really an apt term replacing "sale." Every kind for warm weather use and you know as well as I do that the quality and style, fit and fabric of undies in that store is beyond reproach.

Modish Mandates.

The popularity of the high, close-fitting collar is still rivalled by half high collar with cut-open neck.

Every one who anticipates taking a long trip either by rail or by water should have an over-all coat.

Neck ruchings of tulle with a black thread picot edge are used for the necks of fashionable shoulder capes.

The average woman should wear her hair softly around her face, the tightly drawn-back effects being very trying.

The rather loose, straight cut of the bodice is still modish and liked by those who do not find the tighter waists becoming.

Make the simple blouse more interesting by ornaments of beads on the corners of the collars and cuffs.

Gingham adapts itself to the jumper style admirably, and there should be one or two simple morning frocks of gingham in every outfit.

Smocks of all kinds are in great demand this season.

Wraps are a striking feature of the summer fashions.

The prettiest scalloped skirts are those made of taffeta.

A black taffeta dress has a corsage which takes cape-like curves in the waist at the back.

For summer afternoon dresses there is nothing like the striped voiles and silks with lingerie frills.

The chamois-colored coat is as much in demand this season as was the white coat of last season.

WHEN EUROPE SEES RED

In the wake of the great war will come a disaster even greater than is being wrought by the death-dealing guns and gases in battle-scarred Europe, America does not begin to realize the extent of this disaster which is foretold in the next issue of our NATIONAL SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

THE WAR'S LEGACY OF HATE

Article—By Walter Adolphe Roberts
Illustrated by Adrien Machefert.

The author of this clean-spoken impartial article was living in Paris when the war broke and since then has used his eyes and ears to advantage in France, Germany, Belgium and England. Racial hatreds, he deplores as a fact, have been revived with an intensity unparalleled in civilized times. Russia and Turkey have no part in it. But Frenchmen and Belgians hate the Germans unforgivably. Austro-Hungarians regard the Slavs with a shuddering loathing. Germany does not hate France, but is delirious with fury against England, which, in turn, detests, but does not hate the Germans. The analysis the author makes is not only illuminative but carries intense interest and conviction.

Three-Part Mystery Story. By Anna Katharine Green
Illustrated by Ernest Fuhr.

In this concluding installment of the latest and best Violet Strange story that Anna Katharine Green has written, Mr. Van Broecklyn drags his family skeletons into the light and unfolds the tragedy that has secretly shadowed his life since childhood. His harrowing story—dating back to when as a little lad he watched his father and mother engaged in a desperate rapier duel in the dark. This installment is a complete story in itself and has a most surprising end.

THE DYNAMO OF BUSINESS

Editorial—By Hugh Chalmers.

This business talk to business men is by one of the foremost manufacturers in America. Needless to say, it is straight-from-the-shoulder, common-sense talk about the most risky and yet important single factor that makes the wheels of American industry go round. Read it and call it what you will—a report or a prophecy.

MOONGWE THE SON-DAUGHTER

Story—By Grace MacGowan Cooke.
Illustrated by Maynard Dixon.

Now and then a great picture is painted or a fine story written to commemorate the vanishing Red Man, and few writers combine the knowledge and art in dramatizing Indian life that Grace MacGowan Cooke displays in this little masterpiece of story telling. It is fiction founded on fact—the naked truth—the story of a little Indian boy who rebelled against the tribal edict condemning him to be a squaw man. In it the author expresses the pathos of a dying people, and there's a fine love story in it, too. Moongwe is the boy that puts the hope in Hopi.

Among other features in the next issue of our NATIONAL SUNDAY MAGAZINE is a clever catechism for both sexes, entitled A SELF-EXAMINATION, by Marguerite Wilkinson; and another of those laughable LIMERLEAKS, written and illustrated by Anthony Euwer.

The cover, in colors, by Brinkerhoff, humorously pictures a juvenile Rivers and Harbor Investigation Committee. Investigating what? Whether the water's warm enough for the kids to go swimming.

STOCK MARKET IS IRREGULAR.

EFFECT OF GERMAN REPLY IS FELT IN NEW YORK.

More Careful Perusal of the Statement Indicates Desire on Berlin's Part to Show Greater Conciliation. Bank Figures Disclose Another Large Expansion of Loans.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, May 29.—In the face of a double holiday and strong intimations that Germany's reply to Washington's note in the matter of the Lusitania might be made public before the resumption of business on Tuesday, today's brief session of the stock exchange was altogether a superficial affair. The tone of the outset was irregular, gradually verging towards heaviness on rumors that Germany has issued another marine warning. More careful perusal of this notice served to allay apprehension—in some quarters was regarded as a desire on Berlin's part to show greater conciliation. Leading stocks made full recovery in the final dealings, the market closing with a firm tone. Shares of the low-priced railways, mainly Rock Island and Missouri Pacific, moved contrarily. The Canadian Pacific Railway submitted its report of earnings for April, showing a loss in net of $657,000 and a total decrease since last July of $7,674,000. Canadian Pacific was firm in London, but inclined to further heaviness here. The [illegible] railroads' returns for April also showed the effect of increased operating expenses with a decrease of $[illegible]000 in net. Total sales of stocks amounted to 136,000 shares. The bank statement disclosed another large expansion of loans, but the actual cash [illegible] amounted to considerably over $[illegible],000 with an increase of slightly more than $3,000,000 in reserves. Bonds were irregular on moderate dealing. Total sales (par value) aggregated $988,000. United States coupon [illegible] advanced a point on call during the week.

COMMERCIAL.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

No real markets on Monday, was the announcement most conspicuously posted yesterday in order to give buyers an opportunity to get all the supplies necessary to last over two days. Trading was more active than usual on a Saturday morning. Prices were little changed throughout the list of fresh fruits and vegetables. Supplies were fairly plentiful in cherries, berries, apricots and peaches. Loquats are about cleaned up. Cranberries are also among the fruits soon to be discontinued for a few months. Bananas and pineapples have been in smaller demand and prices are weaker than for some months past.

Yesterday was the first day in two weeks on which a change of the egg quotation was reported. Case count dropped to 21 cents here while in the north there was no change. Receipts were 535 cases. Butter was steady and arrivals were 65,000 pounds. Cheese receipts were 1420 pounds. Considerable Oregon stock has been coming down during the week past.

New potatoes are about the only kind supplying the market, arrivals having averaged less than 300 sacks per day from outside territory. Northern receipts will begin in a few days to be a factor of the market. Yesterday 230 sacks came in. The onion situation is weak and yellow varieties are selling at about 50 cents a sack as a result of the sale for less than that by big jobbers to wagon men and peddlers who are trimming the sprouts and making them marketable. Bean receipts were 17 sacks yesterday and declines in several varieties were reported.

Apprehension that Wind-up of Trade in May Delivery Would be Accompanied by Nerve-racking Changes in Price Turns Out to be Without Warrant.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, May 29.—Some apprehension that the wind-up of trade in the May delivery of wheat would be accompanied by nerve-racking changes of price turned out today to have been without much warrant. After sagging the greater part of the time, the market rallied sharply in the last half hour, and closed unsettled at ⅛ to 2½c under last night. Corn showed a net decline of ⅛@¼ to ½c, oats finished unchanged to ⅛c down and provisions varying from a shade off to a rise of 22½c. Corn reflected only to a moderate extent the weakness of wheat. Evening up of trades in oats took place quietly. Buying of lard on a generous scale by a big packing concern gave backbone to provisions.

SAINT-SAENS SKETCHED BY CLEVER LOS ANGELES GIRL

Vital Pencil Picture of the Most Famous Living Composer and Virtuoso.

Interview with Eminent French Musician Who Makes the Ways of the World Adapt Themselves to His Needs — He Describes His Methods of Work and Talks About the Influence of the War Upon Music.

BY JEANNE REDMAN.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

EXPOSITION GROUNDS, SAN FRANCISCO, May 28.—A cat may look at a king and I have ed to Camille Saint-Saens. When I d Saint-Saens several years ago ould like to say as a child, but few children play him, as the cal difficulties are enormous,) I ht it would be quite wonderful to him and to all the other s of music who occupied my ghts, until I discovered to my that people who do wonder- things are often uninteresting and etimes stupid. Is it not a dis- ing fact that men of genius are often impossible companions? The qualities which are necessary to n who devotes his whole life to development of his own capabili- make him the reverse of all the that charm in a friend.

course, I knew that Saint-Saens interesting because he is a great as well as a composer, and his is on display, as it were, in his the best known of which are "Memoirs," "The Relationship of s and Animals," "Problems and ries" and "Harmony and Mel-it was a delightful surprise to him the fascinating, brilliant per- ty that he is. He is a little with white hair and beard, a on nose, and sparkling eyes that once dark, but now are the that most eyes, 80 years old, be. He is intensely French in er, and exclusively so, I believe, eech. I had been prepared to him excessively tired, not to say acious; but he is so interested erything that goes on that his y years weigh neither upon him his interviewer.

n in France in 1835, Saint-Saens a child prodigy at the age of ving concerts in the large cities urope, and even composing at early age, and contrary to most of infant prodigies, he has ful- his youthful promise. He was at the Conservatory of Music at Paris, and later became a member of the Academy of Beaux Arts.

"I owe a great deal to my mother," he said, "I lost my father early, and my mother was a very stern disciplinarian, which was good for me, and which prepared me for the severities of life which were to come. She was everything to me." He looked so tenderly reminiscent that I felt that it must have been quite a fine thing to be Monsieur Saint-Saens's mother.

"I had a good bourgeoise education as a child, which I developed along my own chosen lines, later," he explained.

A STUDY.

And while he was talking about his education, I studied him more closely.

Like many another great man, Saint-Saens is a wonderful combination of subtlety and simplicity. His eyes are no longer keen—the flash has gone; but I would say "beware" to the man or woman who would try to hoodwink him. You have seen a noble lion sleeping tranquilly in his cage—and how tremendous the change when he arose and shook himself. I imagine that Saint-Saens, the little-big one, can shake himself.

The methods of the great composer are those of the giant whose currents flow deep and who knows that he can despise the chips on the surface of thing. He has what you might call an aggressive composure. I am sure he is capable of roaring.

Popular clamor never could move this little Hercules of harmony. The waves of dissent beat upon him in vain. It is a belligerent soul that shines in those dark and once-lustrous eyes. I am sure that Saint-Saens has been a fighter all his life, and there is something in his fine strong hands that tells you he is capable of reaching out and grasping for his own any part of the universal order that might suit him. His eccentricities are obvious and are those of the prodigious child of destiny, who says:

"The earth is God's footstool; so is it mine."

HIS VANISHING HABIT.

"I must be alone to compose," he said, "and so I vanish. I go away all by myself and buy a piano, and after a time, when all my friends have looked for me in vain, and the world has lost track of me, I come back with a new opera. One time I was gone so long that some of my friends feared I was dead, and the idea spread, until in due time the papers had it, and my death was announced to the sorrow of my country, when—tiens! I was back in Paris with my 'Ascanio.' I have been quite a traveler in my way, usually incognito."

Saint-Saens's travels in search of solitude have led him far into unfrequented countries, some of his inspirations having come to him in remote parts of India.

"I am a very hard worker," he said; "my music is at least honestly conceived and carried out."

"What effect will the war have upon the music of Europe?" I asked him, and in a moment we were in a whirl of excitement.

"It will cut off the poisonous effect which German music has had upon French music," he replied. "It is time that should stop; I have always fought it, the new musical movement in Germany."

"Et pourquoi cela?"

"Ah, c'est la musique que n'est pas harmonieux."

NO GERMAN MODERNISM.

It has been said that Saint-Saens has only rewritten the history of music, probably because, although he is a modern, he adheres to tradition. "I am a modern, but I am opposed to the modern school, as it has developed in Germany," he went on. "Those composers are talented men, but I deplore the influence upon the French. Now it will stop."

"Will the war have a deterrent effect on the propaganda of decadence?"

"It must. Ma foi! it already has had that effect upon all the arts. It will encourage sincerity and will smother pretentiousness. The best standards will survive the shock of battles, ma fille."

Monsieur Saint-Saens is extremely patriotic and before long we were in conversation as to the Germans and the Allies, which was scarcely fit for publication in a neutral newspaper, and I hurried him along to the exposition. "Ah, c'est magnifique! magnifique!" He repeated that many times. "Above all I love the Palace of Fine Arts—that is very beautiful, and I am so glad that France has given the splendid building of the Legion d'Honneur to the exposition. I love America."

"Did you know that there is a statue of you in the French building, monsieur?"

"No, I am glad of it," he answered quite simply. "The exposition is a vast achievement—a great work of art, and I am delighted to have the opportunity to see it. I am an old man, and I have come all the way from Paris to conduct a composition which I have composed purposely for this exposition; does that not show that I love America?"

"There is no reason, I imagine, why you shouldn't," I said, "but please tell me why you do."

"Because she has been so good to France."

"But France was good to her first."

"Yes, perhaps, but you have no idea how much relief the United States has sent to the battlefields, and the help that goes every day from unknown individuals to relieve the suffering."

"Were you pleased with the interpretation that the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave of your symphony?"

"I was delighted; they play wonderfully. I have played with them myself—concertos."

A VIRTUOSO.

Besides being a composer and writer, Saint-Saens is one of the very greatest of living conductors, and a virtuoso of the piano and organ. Among the best known of his works are "Sampson and Delilah," "Ascanio," "Etienne Marcel," "Henry VIII," "Phryne," 'Le Rouet d' Omphale" and "La Danse Macabre."

Saint-Saens pointed out long ago the dominant part that harmony was to play in the music of the future. He was one of the first to see the subjugation of melody, and his contemporaries in France, Cesar Franck, Vincent d' Indy, Faure and Charpentier, Massenet and even perhaps Debussy owe much of the intellectual side of their music to Saint-Saens.

The official orchestra of the exposition is rehearsing the symphonic composition which Saint-Saens brought with him and which he will himself conduct at his first concert on June 19, three others following, the second to be given on June 24, the third on the 27th, while the date for the last concert has not yet been decided upon.

AS TO JUST US.

"What do you think of California? That is, so far as you have seen it?" I asked Saint-Saens in conclusion.

"My child, California is a ravishing symphony. Such glorious harmonies as it has!"

"And San Francisco—what of that?"

"A delight to me; the San Franciscans are cosmopolites. It is a world city. I am sure it is the theater for world music."

SAN DIEGO, May 29.—The wonderful anthropological exhibits at the San Diego exposition attract men of science from all over the world and make the exposition a favored place for students to congregate for study and pleasure.

The collections are the nucleus of a great civic museum of anthropology and ethnology to be established later, which were obtained and assembled through many highly-trained scientists. The fact that so many specimens are found here that are to be seen nowhere else makes it particularly valuable, and the collections will increase in value very rapidly as time goes on, as through the European war many specimens of great value of this kind are being destroyed.

With the destruction of Louvain the remains of the Spy man were lost, upon which were based the bust in the collection showing the evolution of man in the San Diego exposition exhibit. Only a partial set of this series can be seen anywhere else in the world. Not even in the great army medical museum at Washington can much of the material be found that is here, and for this reason the collections are of particular interest to physicians and surgeons.

Today members of the Southern California Dental Association spent the day at the exposition. Dr. J. C. Thompson, surgeon of the United States Navy, addressed 200 members of the association on "The Evolution of the Jaw and Teeth." The lecture was given in the Science of Man Building, and the skulls and exhibits of the ancient Peruvians and Aztecs illustrated the lecture.

CALIFORNIA INDIANS.

Dr. A. L. Kroeber, head of the department of anthropology, lectured Tuesday on "Indians of California" in the New Mexico Building. The ethnological exhibits in the Science and Education Building and the ancient Indian exhibits in the New Mexico Building, as well as slides used by the speaker, illustrated the lecture.

Several years before the exposition opened about $100,000 was appropriated to obtain these collections and the direction of the expenditure of the money was intrusted to the United States National Museum. Many of the highly-trained naturalists of the institution were lent to the exposition and went to Europe, South America and elsewhere to study and obtain specimens for this department of the exposition.

Nearly 5000 skulls of the pre-Columbian Indians were gathered by Dr. A. Hrdlicka, curator of the division of physical anthropology of the National Museum, from Peru. This collection contains skulls of the inhabitants of Peru from 1200 to 1500 years ago. Of it Dr. Joseph C. Thompson of the United States Navy says: "The evidence of trepaning skill among the early redmen of the continent is adequately set forth for the first time in history."

Recently the National Museum, through the courtesy of Dr. Hrdlicka, has made a valuable donation to this section of the exhibits. It is a collection of twenty-one precious specimens of the actual surgical instruments used by the ancient Peruvians in performing the operation of trepaning. The instruments are various-shaped pieces of sharpened flint. In the days when war clubs were popular and stone slings were used to settle differences of opinion a knowledge of trepaning was necessary and the skulls of this collection show a marvelous knowledge of this branch of surgery.

ANCIENT TREPANING.

Dr. Thompson has described in an interesting paper the manner in which the operation of trepaning was instituted by these early Peruvians. He says:

"Primitive people are careful observers of nature; it is to this they owe their skill in woodcraft and hunting. These Indians were able to make the observation that just once in so often some warriors who had received a serious injury of the head recovered instead of dying. In the course of time they learned that these recoveries were due to one of several causes. The skull in the living subject is very resilient, and it may have happened occasionally that when a piece of the skull wall was displaced or dented, thus compressing the brain, that this offending fragment suddenly sprang back into place, thereby relieving the symptoms and affording the patient an opportunity to recover.

"Among primitive peoples some very curious ceremonial rites take place over the dying. These performances at times assume the character of vigorous massage of the body, and

BUYS TO BUILD.

Local Realty and Building Concern Acquires Wilshire Lots as Sites for Large Houses—Reports Sales.

The Cooper-Pyle-Clopine Company has bought a lot 65x150 feet in size on the west side of St. Andrews place, between Second and Third streets, and has started a nine-room house on the site. The same company is building a nine-room residence on a lot 60x150 feet in size on the west side of Serrano, between Third and Fourth streets, and a house of ten rooms for Mrs. S. M. Cooper on the west side of Serrano, near Fourth. The company has just started five flat buildings and a small apartment-house for Henry M. Jones on Mission road.

The company has recently sold for W. E. Clopine to J. W. Brown, a ten-room house at No. 1027 Gramercy place, the lot being 60x150 feet. The price is given at $12,000. W. E. Clopine has sold to Frank Motsch, through the company, a five-room bungalow on Oak drive, Tronico, for $2100. Another deal reported by the firm is the sale for Chapman Bros. Company of a lot 65x150 feet in size on Alexandria avenue, between Fourth and Fifth streets, to May Belle Williams, for $4875.

WIN REROUTING FIGHT.

An important and far-reaching change in the routing of the yellow car lines was put into effect the past week. The Walnut Park car, which formerly started from Seventh and Spring streets and passed by a circuitous route out through Vernon and thence down Long Beach boulevard, has been changed to a more direct and more attractive route. The car now goes down Main street to Twelfth, thence east on Stanford, south on Griffith to Forty-fourth and east to Long Beach boulevard, thence direct to Walnut Park. In this changing of the route the people of Huntington Park and Walnut Park have won a fight of years.

NEW SALES MANAGER.

W. P. Reynolds, a real estate operator of this city, has joined the staff of the Braly-Janss Company as sales manager of that concern's Sierra Park subdivision on Huntington boulevard.

The company is planning extensive development activity in the tract.

BEACH HOLDING IS EXCHANGED.

OCEAN PARK APARTMENTS ARE TRADED AT HIGH FIGURE FOR EASTERN PROPERTY.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

OCEAN PARK, May 29.—The Rose apartments, one of the newest and most substantially improved properties in Ocean Park, has just been sold by George W. Fox to a local investor, who plans to add two more stories to the building and double its present income.

This well-known hostelry occupies a double corner only eighty feet from the ocean front and two blocks from the pier. It has a frontage of approximately 100 feet on Rose avenue, Speedway, and Ozone court, and constitutes probably the largest single holding under one ownership at this rapidly growing resort.

Clear eastern property was involved in the deal, which is said to have totaled about $105,000. John P. Holland and J. A. Bangs, associated with the John P. Holland Company, represented both parties to the transaction.

THEATER OPENING.

Handsome New Culver City Playhouse to Give Performance Tuesday Evening—Bungalow Court Planned.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CULVER CITY, May 29.—The handsome new theater at Culver City will be opened next Tuesday evening. The theater is one of the largest suburban playhouses in Southern California, having a seating capacity of 500. The building is located on the triangular block bounded by Main street, Washington and Del Rey boulevards and occupies a space sixty feet wide and 100 feet deep. The foyer is elaborately finished in white tile and marble. In addition to the theater, several offices and stores are included in the building. The building was erected by Mrs. Fannie A. Henderson of Ocean Park. The lessee is Charles Cronkhite.

K. H. Dorsey has purchased seven lots in Culver City, two of which he will use as a bungalow court of nine buildings. Mr. Dorsey will also build an attractive home on Warner avenue in the near future.

A part of the Harry H. Culver block on Main street has just been leased by a firm which will use the quarters for billiard parlors and a barber shop.

READY FOR SEASON.

Preparations are Being Made for Amusement Features at Seal Beach. New Company Takes over Pavilion.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SEAL BEACH, May 29.—Seal Beach is to have a season of amusement activity, if plans now shaping are carried out. The Seal Beach Amusement Company has just been organized, with C. W. Keeran and O. W. Martin as the principal owners. The company will take over the dance pavilion and all the concessions at this place, with the exception of the bath-house and bowling alleys.

Saturday night, for the first time, the big new electric seal on top of a pagoda between the two pavilions will be lighted. The device is lighted by hundreds of electric lights and the whole sign can be seen far out at sea and for a mile or more up the boulevard toward Anaheim and Santa Ana.

A number of booths are now being built around the pavilions for concessions. A cafe is shortly to be opened on the second floor of the twin pavilions.

RARE MINERALS, METALLURGY AND CHEMISTRY

You are politely requested to submit samples carefully wrapped and tagged, with letter accompanying stating what tests are desired. Make samples of small size. There is no necessity for big chunks. Correspondents offering matter for analyses with card, or scrap of paper, intended to show that the stuff is from Jim Jones, for instance, with no marks of identification on samples, will, hereafter, receive no attention whatever.

Platinum Present.

GOOD SPRINGS (Nev.) May 1.—Q.: Will you kindly publish what you think of sample tagged "C.C."? It comes from our claim in Clark county, Nevada, near Good Springs. We hope it is high-grade copper. We will go in to it thoroughly if you give us encouragement. C. C.

A.: There is a certain maxim, "caveat emptor" (let the purchaser beware,) that is frequently referred to in legal tangles and twists, and by the same token prospectors should know that in all mining transactions there is an element of risk. It is not possible to judge a mine or claim by one sample of ore therefrom.

The sample is chiefly mixed calcite and dolomite, with streaks of malachite in the mass that yield 11.2 per cent. copper, and, owing to the high percentage of carbonates present, it would at least "eat up" a big lot of acids to lixiviate such ore.

There is a trace of platinum in the sample, and it would be exploitation work well done if you would concentrate 100 pounds of the ore and test the concentrates thoroughly for platinum.

There is no plumbojarosite in the sample; iron carbonate is present (siderite.) You should decide the question alone regarding further development on and of the claim in question.

Of Doubtful Value.

SANTA ANA, May 1.—Q.: I send you today in a "ginger box" some "salts" that I scraped from the walls of a tunnel in the Santa Ana Mountains. What salts are these? Is there any value to these salts? H.

A.: Halotrichite (iron alum,) with sodium sulphate and magnesia present in the granular mass mixed with porphyritic matter, and aluminum silicate. Potash low percentage, quartz and iron oxides appear in the mass.

Sulphides Present.

LOS ANGELES, May 2.—Q.: Enclosed, under separate cover, I am forwarding you a sample of material for identification. The sample was taken in Elko county, Nevada. As a reader of The Times I am greatly interested in the rare minerals department. S.

A.: Glad to hear from you. Black "slickensildes" appear at one edge of sample, and it carries sulphides of iron, arsenicum and that of silver; the last occurring in traces only.

Manganese iron, lime and silica are present. Platinum is absent. Sample was not tested for gold.

Concentrating Ore.

LYTLE CREEK, May 2.—Q.: I am sending a sample of rock which I wish you would test for me. I would like to know if it contains anything commercially valuable. There appears to be a large body of this mineral, and it comes in porphyry, with what appears to be lime quartz. Porphyry contact. B.

A.: Glad to hear from you. The sample represents matter that should be practically tested as follows: Place ten pounds of the ore in mortar and pulverize it down to thirty mesh. Then take the milled ore to a creek or pump and pan it down fairly close.

You will then have concentrates from ten pounds of ore, chiefly sulphide of iron, with traces of copper-iron sulphide. Take a weighed portion of the concentrates to a reliable assayer; have it assayed for gold. Inform the assayer that the concentrates are part of a lot obtained from ten pounds of ore, and he will figure results from that standpoint. If gold is found present in paying quantity your further process will then be known, and it will probably be by milling the ore, saving the concentrates over tables and shipping concentrates to the smelter.

Platinum Absent.

MONETA, May 3.—Q.: I am sending you with this a small sample of rock (?) or whatever it is, and would appreciate any information you may give me as to its character. From the description I have read of the newly-discovered platinum ore in Nevada, to my mind, it resembles it. This was found in a bank in Los Angeles county, and not very far from Los Angeles. B.

A.: The sample is a siliceous mixture of magnesia, alumina and iron oxides. It is on the order of a very impure meerschaum and it is of very doubtful commercial value.

Chiefly Magnetite.

LOS ANGELES, May 3.—Q.: Will The Times kindly let us know if the sample carries tungsten, platinum or copper? Sample from Riverside county. C., by MRS. S.

A.: Tungsten, copper and platinum absent. Titanic iron ore, hematite and micaceous iron (a variety of hematite) present.

In Aragonite Form.

LOS ANGELES, May 3.—Q.: I am sending you a sample that looks like twigs from bushes, but it has a taste like salts of some kind. Please tell me what is is. MRS. B.

A.: The sample looks like "flos ferri" (flowers of iron,) but it is contaminated with soda and sulphates of magnesia with lime. It is a mixture resulting from saturated aqueous solutions of the chemicals referred to, nature having completed the process by giving the substance its form and appearance.

Infusorial Earth.

MOJAVE, May 4.—Q.: I am submitting a piece of mineral of some kind that has been named kaolin, magnesite and fire clay by three different persons. Now, I know that the sample cannot be all three of them, and I want to find out which person is right. What is it, anyhow? Thanking you for past favors. T.

A.: Glad to hear from you, and your question is on the order of a triple alliance, sure.

The sample is named at the subheading.

Impure Fuller's Earth.

LOS ANGELES, May 4.—Q.: Please give percentage of alumina, iron and silica. S.

A.: Sample is a very impure earthy, hydrous silicate of aluminum. In contact with water it gives the reaction of fuller's earth.

It analyzes: Silica, 46.70; alumina, 21.11, with iron peroxide, 8.78 per cent. respectively.

Chrysotile.

FRESNO, May 4.—Q.: I am sending a sample of asbestos from a large deposit. What is the rock? Is it of any value? K.

A.: The rock is altered serpentine. The asbestos content is too short and brittle for any ordinary commercial usage.

Peruvians Made Repairs.

even tapping the head with a baton. Such a procedure might readily result in the fortuitous repair of a cracked skull. Again, the warriors may have lain unconscious for many days; in the meantime the splintered and broken bits of bone would necrose and be sloughed off at the bottom of an open sore. This also might readily have been followed by recovery.

"When the medicine men had observed these phenomena a few times their next logical step would be an attempt to assist these processes of nature. This they did by prying the displaced fragments into place and by digging out, often with the finger nails, splintered bits of bone. Another observation made by them was that a wound, of which the edges were sharp and clean-cut, healed more rapidly than one with a rough and jagged contour.

"Further experimenting on the part of the early American surgeons led to an attempt to convert these irregular gashes in the skull into smooth, clean-cut surgical wounds, and this was usually accomplished by scraping the edges of the bone with a sharpened flint. They further advanced in the science of physical diagnosis to the point of observing that occasionally a warrior with only a small fracture of the skull not infrequently succumbed."

Made a Burning Speech.

[Baltimore American:] Lawyer Tommaso Conti was defending Paolo Miraglia, on trial in the Brooklyn court for sending men out to solicit money for a fake mission. He was in his best form. He called heaven to witness the supreme innocence of his much-abused client. He beat his breast and put real fire into his speech.

"Counselor, you're afire," cried Judge Hylan.

"But no," cried the lawyer, in great surprise.

"But yes," shouted two husky court attendants, grabbing off the lawyer's coat and beating out the flames caused by a box of matches that he had lit as he struck at his heart.

Big Job.

BEGIN MAKING AWARDS AT THE EXPOSITION.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—The International Jury of Awards of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, composed of eminent men from all parts of the world, has started the stupendous task of judging the wonderful array of exhibits at the exposition, and as soon as the work is completed, a task which will require several months, prizes will be awarded. The awards, which will be divided into six classes, include a grand prize, a medal of honor, a gold medal, a silver medal, a bronze medal and honorable mention without a medal. The various jury groups are fully completed, and, with but few exceptions, the members are already in San Francisco.

STUPENDOUS TASK.

There are about 450 members of the jury, which includes representatives of the various foreign nations which are participating at the exposition, all of whom were appointed by President Charles C. Moore of the exposition, who is honorary president of a main jury on awards, known as the "Superior Jury." The jury's task in judging the exhibits in the eleven departments of exhibits at the exposition is a mammoth one, and, in order to facilitate their labors, the eleven departments have been divided into 156 groups and 800 classes, for which fifty-four group juries were selected, and it is expected that their part of the work will be completed within the next few days. After the group juries have completed the task assigned to them, the chairman of each group jury automatically becomes a member of a higher, or "department jury," and, according to the regulations governing the system of awards at the exposition, the chairman and vice-chairman of each of the eleven department juries becomes a member of the Superior Jury at the expiration of his services in departmental work. This rule therefore indicates that there will be twenty-two of the department jurors who will be on the Superior Jury, eleven of these being foreign commissioners on their respective juries.

GET EARLY START.

In addition, the superior jury will be composed of members of the national commission, nine commissioner-generals from the foreign countries having the largest exhibits, and members of the California commission. President Moore of the exposition will act as honorary president of the superior jury, Director-in-Chief Dr. F. J. V. Skiff as president and there will be four vice-presidents, three of whom will represent Central and South America, Europe and the Orient, with Capt. Asher C. Baker as fourth vice-president.

No international exposition in the history of the world has seen the gathering of its jury at such an early date as at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. The stupendous task in front of the members of the various groups as that of the superior jury made necessary, however, their early attendance. The scope of the exhibits is such that the various departments will be occupied for weeks before the time arrives for the final decisions of the superior jury and this body, the supreme court of awards, faces a herculean task in selecting the prize winners from among the thousands of exhibitors represented at the exposition. The award of prizes at the exposition is somewhat in the nature of an elimination contest, which assures correct and competent judging by men who have been associated with such work for many years. Capt. Asher Carter Baker, for instance, has been officially connected with practically every great exposition for years past, and is recognized as one of the foremost critics in the world. The other members of both the group and superior juries will include the names of men known throughout the world as competent and unbiased judges of exhibits and whose awards have never yet been questioned in any respect.

FAIR CHANCE FOR ALL.

With thousands of exhibits in all departments to be gone over, each one receiving the most careful attention, some idea of the task ahead of the jurors may be realized. A visit to any of the great exhibit palaces of the exposition is sure to show just how painstaking and careful must be the jurors' decisions. In Machinery Hall alone, there is work ahead for the members for weeks while the Palace of Fine Arts offers perhaps even greater labor and care. In the Palace of Liberal Arts, Horticulture, Agriculture, Mining, Transportation and Food Products are thousands of exhibits entitled to be considered for award, each marking some advancement in the world's progress and each demanding some tribute from the men who are to determine the exact part an exhibit has played in the betterment of mankind in one way or another. To see the great moguls of the rails, modern motor vehicles, models of great ocean liners, aeroplanes and electric engines in the Palace of Transportation is to appreciate the labors ahead of the jurors who will award prizes along transportation lines alone. In the Liberal Arts Palace there is an exhaustive number of exhibits all of which will receive consideration and the same rule applies in every exhibit palace at the exposition. The jurors named for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition face a greater task than any ever set for a similar body in the history of world's expositions, but the personnel of the entire jury assures competent awards and a careful consideration of all exhibits before these awards are made.

WHAT WE ARE WORTH.

BY WALTER J. BALLARD.

ACCORDING TO the Bureau of the Census, each man, woman and child in the United States is worth $1965, the total of our national wealth being $187,739,000,000, excluding exempt real estate.

Compared with other principal countries as to national wealth the record is:

United States	$187,739,000,000
Great Britain	85,000,000,000
Germany	80,000,000,000
France	50,000,000,000
Russia	40,000,000,000
Austria-Hungary	25,000,000,000
Italy	20,000,000,000
Belgium (before the war)	9,000,000,000

This proves ours to be the richest country in the world.

The wealth of the nation as a whole is nearly twenty-five times as great as it was in 1850, while that of the individual, in spite of the enormous increase in population, is about six times as great.

The exempt real estate, estimated at a value of $12,314,000,000, or $129 per capita, includes the buildings, other structures and public works owned by the Federal, State and local governments, with the land on which they stand, together with such real property of educational, charitable and religious institutions as are exempt from taxation.

Real estate, taxed and exempt, represents nearly 60 per cent. of the estimated value of all property.

By States the record principally is:

New York	$25,011,000,000
Illinois	15,484,000,000
Pennsylvania	15,468,000,000
Ohio	8,908,000,000
California	8,464,000,000
Iowa	7,868,000,000
Texas	6,860,000,000
Massachusetts	6,303,000,000
Missouri	5,842,000,000
New Jersey	5,743,000,000
Minnesota	5,547,000,000
Michigan	5,427,000,000
Indiana	5,195,000,000

No other State exceeds the $5,000,000,000 mark.

Comparing wealth to population, the chief per capita records are:

State	Per capita wealth
Nevada	$4865
Iowa	3345
North Dakota	3210
California	3113
Nebraska	2945
Montana	2743
Colorado	2668
Kansas	2525
Oregon	2523
Illinois	2507

In no other State was the figure as high as $2500. Only three States—Illinois, California and Iowa—for which the total valuations are high, show high per capita figures.

In round figures the total wealth of the entire British Empire is $108,000,000,000, while ours is $187,000,000,000, an excess in our favor of $79,000,000,000.

In 1904 our national wealth was $107,000,000,000 against $187,000,000,000 in 1912, a growth of $80,000,000,000 in only eight years, or at the rate of $10,000,000,000 a year. That's certainly "going some." As a staying power this great wealth of ours insures to us the world lead financially.

HOTEL CONTRACT LET.

Work to be Begun at Once on Manhattan Beach Hostelry—Building is in Spanish Style.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

MANHATTAN BEACH, May 29.—C. W. Sparks and L. L. Chandler of the California-Arizona Construction Company, awarded during the week a contract for the construction of a two-story hotel and store building at this place. The building will occupy one of the most important sites in the new and rapidly-developing commercial center of Manhattan Beach, being situated on Marine avenue, about midway between the strand and Highland avenue. The place is in close proximity to the new Pacific Electric station and City Hall.

In addition to the large cafe, with its ample kitchen and service quarters, the building will contain two modern and well-lighted stores on the ground floor. Immediately over the stores is located the main feature of the building, a unique type of roof garden with Spanish style cement columns and vine-covered arbors. Montgomery & Montgomery are the architects.

More than half the rooms in the hotel portion of the building overlook the roof garden and the ocean by means of French windows. The building itself is of a modified Spanish Renaissance design, the walls being of white cement stucco and the roof of red clay tile. A tenant for the property has been secured.

FRANKLIN "HIGH" CONTRACT LET.

FINE SCHOOL GROUP TO BE STARTED AT ONCE.

Buildings, Three in Number, to Cost About Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars—Four Awards Made During Week for Grammar Institutions.

To the Los Angeles Planing Mill Company was awarded during the past week the general contract for the construction of the first three buildings of the new Franklin High School group on Avenue 54, between Irvington place and Hub street. A perspective of the group, prepared by the architects, Elmore R. Jeffery and Frank R. Schaefer, was recently published exclusively in The Times.

The school will eventually consist of five buildings, the administration building, science hall and heating plant being erected at this time. The administration building will contain three stories and will cover a ground area of 192x100 feet. The science hall will be of equal height and will be 65x110 feet in size.

The buildings will be of brick construction and of classic design. The Board of Education is expending about $150,000 on the project.

The firm of Irvine & Dow was given the contract during the week for the construction of the new Sixty-sixth-street school, a two-story brick building containing nine classrooms, an auditorium and sloyd and domestic science departments. The structure will be 118x105 feet in ground area and will cost about $40,000. Edelman & Barnett are the architects.

The contract for the new Forty-second-street school, a two-story brick structure of seven classrooms and an auditorium, has been let to the Merchants' Realty and Investment Company. The building will cost about $25,000. Kysor & Biggar drew the plans.

Edward Arnaelsteen has been awarded the contract for the erection of a new school at Rose Hill. The building, which was planned by Frank L. Stiff, will contain five classrooms and a sloyd department. Carl Lange has been given the contract for a two-story brick addition to be built to the Aragon-street school. George F. Costerisan is the architect.

All of the schools named are provided for by the big school bond issue approved by the voters last fall.

SOCIALISM SEVENTY YEARS AGO AND NOW.

[EDITORIAL.]

A BOOK which has been out of print for many years and can only be found in a few old libraries was published in 1845 by a German tailor named Weitling. "It is," says Orth, "illogical, full of contradictions, and all of the errors of a child's reasoning." But it remains the classic philippic of the labor unions, because it blends, with the illogical terminology of sentimentalism, the assurance of hope.

"Property," said Weitling, "is the root of all evil. Gold is the symbol of this world of wrongs. We have become as accustomed to our coppers as the devil to his hell. When the rule of gold shall cease, then the tear drops which are the tokens of true brotherliness will return to the dry eyes of the selfish, the soul of the evildoer will be filled with noble and virtuous sentiments such as he had never known before, and the impious ones who have hitherto defied God will sing His praise. The reign of property will be terminated and the age of humanity begin. Forward, brother workingmen; with the curse of Mammon on our lips let us await the hour of our emancipation, when our tears will be transmuted into pearls of dew, our earth transformed into a paradise and all of mankind united into one happy family."

There is a difference between the Socialism of 1845 as expounded by Weitling and the Socialism of 1915 as expounded by its leaders and apostles today. Imagine Sam Gompers with his Chicago brick block declaring that "property is the root of all evil" and asserting that his "soul was filled with noble and virtuous sentiments" when he welched on the unfortunate Danbury hatters, whom he had misled into a boycott that cost them their homes and savings bank accounts.

Imagine Job Harriman with the $15,000 which he swiped from the mechanics and servant girls of Los Angeles for defending the McNamaras by joining Clarence Darrow in urging them to plead guilty, with the curse of Mammon on his lips awaiting the hour when his tears will be transmuted into pearls to be sold at so much per pearl for cash or approved credit.

Imagine Debs with his $5000 salary demanding that "the rule of gold shall cease, and the tear drops which are the tokens of true brotherliness" shall suffuse the dry eyes of the selfish bankers of Los Angeles until their accumulated weeps can be utilized to irrigate the lawns in the public park.

The three theories that underlie Socialism, says Orth, "are first, that God made the world good, hence all you need to do is to revert to this pristine goodness and the world is reformed. Second, that society is what it is through evolution and that it is only necessary to control by environment the factors of evolution and the product will be preordained.

Imagine McCarthy and Tveitmoe reverting to the pristine goodness of God and reforming the I. W. W.'s who yowl with delight at their utterances by controlling their environment, and evoluting them from the bit drinking saloons to the higher and holier atmosphere of the Palace Hotel, where bar keepers would fill them up with dry Mumm.

The theory of modern Socialism, says Orth, "is that when all members of society work at useful occupations then all the necessary things can be done in a few hours. Six or four, or some even say two, hours a day will be sufficient to do all the drudgery and the essential things in a well organized human beehive. There is to be nothing morose or despondent in this toil. It is to be done to the melody of good cheer and willingness."

How is this great change to come about, and what is to be the exact organization of society under this regime of work and co-operation. Here unanimity ceases. As a criticism, Socialism is unanimous, as a method it is divided, as a reconstructive process it is hopelessly at sea.

The argument for Socialism may be divided into three parts—nonsense, utter nonsense and damned nonsense.

A Calm Review.

UNION METHODS STOP INDUSTRY.

NOW IS THE TIME TO INSTALL FACTORIES.

As Soon as European War is Over There will be a Rush to Set Their Mills Again in Motion, but America Suffers from the Labor Dictators and the Spineless Legislators.

In a recent pamphlet entitled "Modern Fallacies," Hubert Howe Bancroft discusses the present European condition and the reason why the San Francisco Bay has not thousands of factories. He says:

"We should have on this coast 100 woolen mills, 1000 cotton mills, and 5000 other factories, and will have some day, these or their equivalent, but only when conditions appeal to capital, and mill owners are free to manage their business their own way, yet always within the bounds of humanity and healthful progress, but without interference from interlopers of whatsoever kind or quality.

"In a loose-jointed republican government extremes often meet. As between the dregs of low society and the chaff of high society there is little to choose. The intermediate class is the commonwealth, those who work, either with hands or head; those who do things, either with money or brains. Work is the greatest thing in the world; God's curse, man's redemption; the Creator's primal punishment, man's greatest blessing. Work is civilization, and civilization is humanity reinforced. The Panama Canal and the California expositions are the apotheosis of labor, not the apotheosis of the manipulators of labor. A workless world is savagery, and the workless part of society is the worst part. Wherefore, as God's best gift, though given us in anger, we hail it as divine, and place it high above principalities and powers.

"The workingman of today is the concrete expression of that form of labor which bore the primal curse for some several thousand years, whether as the slave of brute force or as the creature of capital, but which now in the more advanced countries has fairly well emancipated itself. Then gradually arose apostles of chicane and greed, who gained ascendency over the workingman to exploit him. Thus was invented and applied coersive measures, nominally for the benefit of the laborer, but really to strengthen the position of the walking delegate, as strikes and incendiarism, the boycott, blackmail and unionism; later came dynamite as the ultimate appeal.

"While the walking delegate himself did no work, he fared sumptuously every day upon the work of others. Contributions and crimes were imposed. Dues were levied and arbitrary rules established; no American boy might learn a trade even of his own father without obtaining permission and paying for it; any respectable citizen in the legitimate pursuit of his calling might for purposes of coercion or revenge be brought to annoyance or ruin by means of the infamous boycott.

"There is in nearly every large city a coterie of nondescripts who do not work, but who live from the work of others; who exploit the workingman ostensibly for his good, but in reality for their own selfish purposes; who fill the minds of their proteges with false notions, insurrectionary and un-American—that they have rights which others do not possess, that they have claims on their fellow-men which are not reciprocal, and of which their neighbors are endeavoring to deprive them. To maintain these alleged rights they are justified in resorting to any means, legal or otherwise, even to coercion and crime; in defense of which incendiary claims before the facile courts they employ lawyers, paid large fees from the pockets of the workingmen, and who hesitate not at subornation and perjury.

"Called by various names, as walking delegate, boss, sponge, demagogue, labor leader, exploiter of workingmen, the toilers, as the press-panderers sanctimoniously call them, are coddled until, deprived of their natural manliness they become as children in the hands of designing men. Unions are formed and the rights of others invaded. Business men and a pliant newspaper press submit to impudent and unjust demands in the management of their affairs, fearing loss of patronage; judges, office holders, all who live by the ballot acquiescing, for labor has votes to dispose of. In this way labor becomes a trust, a monopoly, all the work is given at a high wage to half of the workingmen, the other half being left laborless to starve. Contract work, in defiance of law and justice, is given not to the lowest bidder, but to unionism.

"As often as otherwise, in the arrogance of ignorance, the labor leaders resort to measures unfavorable to labor, as defeating any measure for the public benefit if thereby they can pose as the champions of labor; making the wage of class work equal, regardless of the worth or efficiency of individual workers; advancing the labor wage until it becomes prohibitory to industry, resulting in non-employment and high cost of living. Thinking to gain votes thereby they refused to grant music lovers the privilege of erecting a million-dollar operahouse, not at public expense, but at their own cost, thus withholding from the pockets of their proteges their part of the expenditure, and leaving in the civic center the unsightly scar of a vacant lot where might now stand a beautiful edifice. They promulgate the false doctrine not of their right to work, which no one denies them, but their right to demand that the government, that is to say, their fellow-citizens, shall provide them with work, whether necessary or profitable or not, which is but another form of blackmail leading to pauperism. As well might trade demand of labor profitable custom, or capital a good investment.

"In legislation every measure affecting patronage is stoutly opposed that does not give labor some unfair advantage, some special and unjust privilege. Every advantage over his neighbor is his right, free schools, free hospitals, courts and penitentiaries, while paying nothing for the support of the government that protects him in his infamies.

"The aims and actions of the labor leaders strike at the very heart of American liberty, giving to one class the power of coercion while depriving their victims of any means of defense. Thus laziness and inefficiency are exalted as meritorious; to do the least possible work for the highest pay serves right his natural enemy, the employer, the capitalist, the government. The further fallacy is instilled that restriction by law to a short day's work is a gain forced from the employer, when in truth it is a direct loss to the workingman, to his worth to himself and others, which in the end rules all.

"The right to work; labor demands it and the law concedes it. The right to work; unionism demands it for itself, but denies the right to others, the law winking acquiescence. But this is not to the point. Labor leaders demand for their proteges, as before stated, their right to demand that their neighbor, that is to say, the man with money or the government, shall furnish him with work. Reverse the proposition, say that the workingman shall supply the tradesman with customers, the lawyer with clients, and the banker with depositors, and the absurdity appears. Unionism demands for itself the special privileges it denies to others. It demands that all the work shall be given to half the laborers, while the other half is left to starve. It demands that this coterie shall have short hours and high pay, and enforces its demands upon the disobedient by means of blackmail and the boycott, judges who are elected by votes sustaining the injustice. A singular state of things, one-half of the workingmen unemployed, while all the work is given to the other half at an exorbitant wage, a wage fatal to manufactures and prohibitory to general prosperity and progress. Likewise, the non-reversible absurdity that it is an obligation on the part of one class of citizens to furnish another class with work, that is to say, with support, since work is their support. I am not speaking of economic policy or ethical obligations, but only of the lawless arrogance assumed by unionism.

"Wealth is won by work, by work and economy. The same field is open to the laborer of today, the same opportunity to utilize the natural and economic resources of the country that his predecessors had.

"Instead of making avail of it the exploiters of labor prowl around to secure all they can from government, that is to say, the people through their representatives in office who live on votes, and from capital, that is to say, from those who have done their work and saved up the proceeds. Another fallacy—to give the laborer more time, not for the beer shops but for home enjoyment and mental culture.

"The intellectual life is open to him who wants it, whether his wage is $3 or $6 a day. Intellectual loafing is not intellectual living, the former being the special province of college graduates and scions of wealth. Intellectual boozing is another sort of culture, practiced alike by clubmen and hodcarriers. Let us beware of an excess of kultur and conscience, lest we fall into the errors of the Kaiser.

"There are classes of workers and there are grades of work. There is high-grade work that does and should command a high wage, and there is low-grade work that skilled labor will not touch, and which can be done only at low wage. It degrades no one—you cannot degrade labor—it injures no one, to give such work to the Asiatic, who is glad to get it, the lowest wage in America being more than the highest wage in Asia. We can never have our world center of industry without employing some cheap labor, and it is an insane policy on the part of our government in excluding it.

"No one objects to labor unions, but only their abuse by the exploiters of the workingman. No one objects to unionism, but only to the abuse of it. If unionism cannot win its way fairly and honestly it would be better abolished; it will never be able to sustain itself by violence. No one objects that labor should unionize, but only that it should not tyrannize. Why should we tamely submit to the imposition of labor any more than to the imposition of capital? Labor unions for the pleasure and lawful benefit of the members is one thing, and to this no one can object; unionism as manipulated by professional overseers for the exploitation of the workingmen is quite another thing, and smacks too strongly of Prussian militarism long to be endured in America.

"The government is quite ready to restrict capitalism but balks before laborism. Governmental superintendence of labor is as necessary as governmental superintendence of capital—and more, as labor has more votes than capital, and an excess of votes is a fault of our republican government.

"Labor in all its many interests and activities, as unions, wages, hours and strikes should be under the immediate control of the government and managed by honest and disinterested officials having equally at heart the welfare of the workingman and the interest of the employer—should be regulated by law as capital is regulated, and not left to the exploiter of the workingman to act as he pleases in defiance of law and from purely selfish motives. Little by little they are undermining the government, inserting their insidious policy in the laws of the state and nation, only like the railroad incubus, let us hope, to meet with like defeat in the end, when the people return to reason and to right.

"In no department of economics or industry, of politics or society is such criminal license allowed, such defiance of law, equity and decency permitted to go unpunished, unreproved, as that practiced by the exploiters of the workingman. That they should be permitted by the boycott to ruin an honest tradesmen, in the legitimate pursuit of his calling, for simply maintaining his right as an American freeman to manage his business himself instead of allowing others to do it for him, the interloper in the meantime being protected by the police and sustained by the courts in this system of coercion and blackmail is infamous.

"Thus it is easily seen why San Francisco is not more of a manufacturing city. Labor is as essential to manufactures as is raw material. If labor and material cannot be had at a fair and reasonable price home industry is doomed. Again, be it said, the first consideration for this country is manufactures, the first consideration for manufactures is labor at a fair price, the first consideration for labor is absolute freedom, emancipation from any sort of tyranny. This is the broad road to permanent prosperity and there is none other.

"And from the government, to which all good citizens look for redress, we get no help, for judges and rulers, all who live by the ballot box, legislative and executive dignitaries, as well as the vicious grafter of the municipality, are infected by the same hunger for office, and by the itching palm that actuates and makes fat the exploiters of the workingman and fills the coffers of the highly honorable and respected man of affairs.

"It is all very well, however, to rail at the government; the fault is our own; it lies with those who prefer money to morality, who prefer personal profit to the purity of the commonwealth, who prefer ill-gotten gain to honesty and decency, who prefer in courts judges who wink at wealth, never forgetting whence are to come the votes to secure their re-election—who will submit to insult and interference rather than forego profit, in a word, the fault lies with the influential members of the community who are too indifferent or too timid to arise and purge their city of its defilement.

"The trouble is that too many of us prefer bad government to good, prefer pliant tools in office to men we cannot buy, prefer slavish labor whose votes we can control to manly citizenship in our workingmen, prefer a small iniquitous personal gain to the honor and interests of a great commonwealth. And withal over this small personal gain which we so jealously guard we are great cowards, the best of us even not daring to speak from our hearts, as was shown at an election the other day when over a score of evil measures put forth by the exploiters of the workingmen, not a word was spoken against them while under discussion before election, but at the polls they were defeated by a majority of five or three to one."

Some Notable Streets.

[Chicago Journal:] The highest street in the world is Main street, in Denver; the richest is Fifth avenue, in New York City; the widest is Market street, Philadelphia, and the shortest is the Rue Ble, in Paris. The dirtiest street is that of Tchanksti in Nankin; the cleanest is the Via Castile, in Seville, Spain; the most aristocratic one is Grosvenor place, in London; the most beautiful is the Avenue des Champs Elysees, Paris. The narrowest street is Via Sol, Havana, Cuba, which has a width of no more than forty-two inches.

REPORTS ON WAGES AND CONDITIONS.

Timely Bulletins from All Parts of the World.

The Commercial Statistician publishes a statement concerning trade unionism in Australia in which it is shown that the total membership in such organizations, all Australia included, is 433,000, out of a total population of less than 5,000,000. The Statistician compares these figures with those of certain other countries, showing that, on a population basis, Australia takes the first place, its average being eighty-nine trades unionists to every 1000 inhabitants, as compared with:

Great Britain	71 per 1000
Germany	65 per 1000
New Zealand	56 per 1000

Industrial conditions are not pacific in Australia. Disaffection and dissatisfaction with both wages and conditions of labor are constantly occurring, and, although the doctrines of industrial arbitration have been made to apply generally throughout the commonwealth, there is not that resultant harmony which bespeaks perfect agreement between master and men. All this goes to prove that in each and every country wages and labor conditions are really governed not by forced labor legislation, nor by labor union rules and edicts, but by the unchangeable law of supply and demand.

Building trades workers in industrially free Los Angeles can compare these low union rates of wages in Australia with the much higher rates they are being paid, union or no union, and then thank their stars that they are living and working in a free-labor open-shop city. The same remarks apply to the weekly rates of wages enumerated above.

In agricultural and pastoral pursuits in Australia the wage scale is more elastic, but the following may be said to be typical of those ruling generally and to include rations, except where otherwise specified:

Occupations—	Wages.
Plowmen, per week	$ 6.08
Farm laborers, per week	5.47
Thrashing machine hands, per hour	.18

Food Costs in Australia.

To understand more clearly the position of the Australian worker it is only necessary to compare this earnings with the cost of his living. Food prices follow:

Beef, per pound	$ .14
Mutton, per pound	.11
Milk, per quart	.09
Honey, per pound	.10
Bread, per 4-pound loaf	.14
Coal, per hundredweight	.48
Firewood, box blocks, per hundredweight	.31
Tea, medium quality, per pound	.30
Coffee, pure, per pound	.30
Rice, per pound	.06
Soap, common, per pound	.06
Sugar, refined, per pound	.05½
Tobacco, home grown, per pound	1.28
Tobacco, imported	1.42
Preserved fish:
Salmon, per pound	.21½
Herrings, per pound	.11
Sardines, per pound	.14
Candles, per pound	.12½
Kerosene, per gallon	.25
Salt, ordinary, per pound	.02
Ales:
English, per dozen	2.74
Australian, per dozen	1.40
Australian, per pint	.06
Porter, imported, per dozen	2.74
Brandy:
Imported, per bottle	1.46
Australian, per bottle	.88
Whisky, per bottle	.97
Wine, Australian, per dozen	4.38
Do., per gallon	1.46

It needs only a brief comparison of these food prices with the low rates of wages prevailing (under trades unionism) to see that the Australian worker must exercise the most strict economy (to say nothing of the heavy taxation in that labor-agitator ridden country) to "make ends meet."

Is it any wonder that European farm workers of both sexes grasp at the first opportunity to emigrate to the United States, where they are sure of a good living wage—a wage several times larger than those quoted above!

Farm Wages in Canada.

"In recent years," says the Canadian Census and Statistics Monthly, "the wages of farm help have increased considerably, and they reached their highest point during the bumper harvest of 1913. But in 1914 the pendulum swayed back, less labor being required on farms owing to lighter crops. Since August, the war has had for one of its effects an increase in the supply of farm labor and consequently a fall in wages. The demand for farm labor, since the setting in of winter, has also decreased because of the increased cost of board. Correspondents in some districts state that men are glad to give their services for their keeping during the winter. A correspondent in Western Ontario warns farmers against the indiscriminate engagement of discarded town laborers who, having had no agricultural experience, cannot render effective farm help. In the West it is pointed out that owing to the large amount of work which farmers were able to do last fall, wages are likely to be lower in the spring, because a smaller number of men will be required.

"For all Canada the average wages per month in the summer including board, are shown to be $35.56 for male and $18.81 for female help; for the year, including board, the average wages are $323.30 for males and $189.35 for females, whilst the average cost of board per month works out at $14.27 for males and $11.34 for females, as compared with $12.49 and $9.56 in 1910. Average wages per month in 1914 are lowest in Prince Edward Island, viz., $24.71 males and $13.48 females; in Nova Scotia they are $31.20 and $14.80 and in New Brunswick $31.93 and $15.10. In Quebec the averages are $32.56 and $15.65 and in Ontario $32.09 and $16.67. In the western provinces they are for males $39.13 in Manitoba, $40.51 in Saskatchewan and $40.26 in Alberta, females receiving $23.35 in Manitoba, $22.96 in Saskatachewan and $22.63 in Alberta. The highest wages are paid in British Columbia, viz., $47.85 for males and $31.13 for females, these figures being substantially less than in 1910, when males received $57.40 and females $38."

MONEY WENT TO CANADA.

Railroads Can Buy Steel Rails from the Canadians for Less than from American Mills.

[American Economist:] If you are looking for the reason why so many thousands of American steel workers are idle and why the big steel concerns are unable to pay dividends, a recent transaction showing the practical results of a free trade tariff, will throw some light on the subject. Steel rails are now on the free list. Under the protective tariff of 1909 they bore a duty of $3.92 per ton. Not long ago the Illinois Central Railroad Company purchased from a Canadian mill 35,000 tons of ninety-pound open-hearth rails. The price paid was a little more than $1 per ton less than the same grade of rails could be bought in the United States. Under a protective tariff the Canadians would have had to shade their price at least $4 per ton to make the sale. As the case stands, they had to cut the price only a little more than $1. So the money for 35,000 tons, amounting to about $1,000,000, goes to Canada, instead of staying in our own country, and American workers are robbed of a corresponding amount of work and wages. That is free trade.

"Doesn't Mean Me."

[Collier's:] Next to telling any one he's a liar, it has become the unforgivable insult to inform him that he lacks a sense of humor. Nearly any Yankee would rather be accused of rifling the till or poisoning his grandmother than to have it hinted that he can't see a joke. Such being the case, one must admit the business astuteness of an author who wrote in the "Foreword" to his novel: "It should be read only by people with a sense of humor." We are waiting to pin a large medal on any one who will swear that he read that sentence and then exclaimed: "That doesn't mean me!"

What Los Angeles has gained through annexation of vast domain in San Fernando Valley.

The map reveals, as has no other drawing heretofore published, the extent of the mighty preparations made for the development of the fertile empire that has just come the profitable utilization of the aqueduct surplus. The blue line defines the limits of the territory actually annexed, while the red line bounds the huge district for the valley people have already made provision. The different trunk lines and laterals of the permanent irrigation system to be constructed by the annexed region, and main that are now supplying Los Angeles with water for domestic uses, are all shown just as the engineers have laid them out. The temporary but highly by means of which the irrigation of fully one-eighth of the irrigable land in the annexed district will be made immediately possible, is indicated by a double line. which has not as yet voted funds for the construction of its portion of the ultimate system, is set off to itself, as are also the towns of Owensmouth and San Fernando, concerned with purely legal technicalities of the moment, still retail their municipal identities. The photographs and other drawings give a hint of the real character has been annexed to the city. Within the limits of the area are public schools, completed and building, that compare with any in Southern California, as well as a boulevards. The San Fernando Valley is bringing into Los Angeles rich, progressive and ready-made communities that, standing alone, vie with any in the Southland the homeseeker, the practical farmer, the poultry raiser and the horticulturist. With the surplus water of the aqueduct made available through annexation, there is possibilities of the region. As an asset to Los Angeles itself, the value of this newest and greatest of its many additions is incalculably great.

Epochal.

GREATEST ACHIEVEMENT IN HISTORY OF THE CITY.

Annexation of San Fernando Valley and Agreement for Disposition of Surplus Aqueduct Water Best Bargains Ever Made by Municipality — District a Made-to-order "Addition," with "Improvements All In."

HERE is what one election (and it was not a special election, at that) has given Los Angeles:

(1.) An addition of more than 100,000 acres in the San Fernando Valley to its municipal area.

(2.) A market for 11,000 inches of the total of 18,000 miner's inches of surplus aqueduct water that has been going to waste.

(3.) A source of revenue from the sale of this surplus water which, upon the completion of the $2,500,000 irrigation system to be built by the San Fernando Valley people themselves, will relieve the city of an annual tax burden of $1,500,000, representing the aqueduct carrying charges, and which will eventually pay a handsome net profit.

(4.) The opportunity to go ahead with the aqueduct power project, a thing impossible of accomplishment as long as the enormous water flow was being put to no use.

(5.) An absolutely unique 87,000-acre garden city within the city, that being the estimated acreage to be brought under irrigation in the valley.

(6.) A great domain of rich producing land, capable of eventually adding untold wealth to the city's taxable resources, and already yielding a huge revenue in crops.

(7.) The finest system of paved boulevards in any similar area in the country, together with complete steam and electric railway facilities, that solve for the time being all transportation problems in the region annexed.

(8.) A brand new made-to-order addition of a type unusual in the growth of cities, an area boasting ideal community conditions and possessing educational facilities on a par in every way with any in the Southland.

When the voters of Los Angeles went to the polls at the recent primary election and voted by an overwhelming majority to take the proposed annexation district of the San Fernando Valley into the city and thereby to provide a method for disposing of the surplus water of the aqueduct, there were probably none who dreamed that the market for this surplus or any part of it could or would be found until after the expensive irrigation system which the valley people had agreed to install had been completed.

William Mulholland, the man of few words, who put through the world-beating engineering enterprise that has made the miracle of a permanent and inexhaustible water supply in Los Angeles and its vicinity possible, broke his silence long enough last week to announce that he had found the way out.

Not content to wait upon the sale of the big bond issue upon which the starting of actual construction operations upon the valley irrigation system is now dependent, the builder of the aqueduct has devised a method of delivering immediately enough water for the irrigation of some 12,000 acres of land in the valley. To make the wonder of the whole proceeding all the greater, the Department of Public Service was able to report yesterday afternoon that some of this water had actually been diverted to cultivated ground.

The owner of this land will pay the first revenue to be derived from the aqueduct surplus nearly two years in advance of the time it had been believed any such funds would be available for the reduction of the present burden of the aqueduct carrying charges.

HOW IT WAS DONE.

The explanation of these astonishing announcements is even more interesting than the news itself. As a natural explanation of the situation the average citizen would probably conclude that Mr. Mulholland and the department had been quietly constructing an extensive distributing system in the valley on their own responsibility and unbeknown to the public. What has really happened is this:

A few weeks ago Mr. Mulholland started two huge ditch machines at widely separated points, working toward each other. One machine was at a place on the landscape just north of Chatsworth and the other was at the edge of the San Fernando reservoir. These machines kept gouging away at the rate of two feet a minute until they came so near to a collision that laborers with spades were able to dig away the barrier of dirt between them with a few thrusts.

The result of the process was a ditch two and a half feet deep, ten feet wide and eight miles long, with a gravity slope from the great aqueduct reservoir to the point where it ends. Dropping gently away to the south from the line of this ditch are 12,000 acres of land, every square foot of which can be irrigated by the simple expedient of constructing common dirt ditches. The owners of this land are eager for the water and are willing to pay the city's price for it.

The Zelzah canal, as it is called, is now full of water and ready for business. Lateral ditches are being dug by land owners all through the section, and the revenue in sight is growing larger every day.

The total cost of this temporary trunk line ditch is given by Mr. Mulholland at $3500, this amount including labor and everything. Used to its capacity, this makeshift will bring in at the cent an inch per hour rate determined upon by the City Council in 1913, approximately $100,000 a year.

THE VALLEY'S PART.

In the meantime everything has been set for the carrying out of the great irrigation scheme contemplated in the annexation election. Not a moment will be wasted after the funds from the bonds voted by the valley people are ready for use. The office engineers of the department of public service have completed full plans for the entire valley system, down to the minutest details. The amount of pipe required for every unit of the system and for every main and lateral is known to the inch.

Representatives of local and eastern steel concerns are already figuring on the mammoth order of pipe that will be required for the valley project. The contract will be one of the largest of its character ever let in the United States and is attracting bidders from everywhere. Twenty-five thousand tons of steel in all will be needed in the work.

For the irrigation of the portion of the annexed territory known officially as Los Angeles County Irrigation District No. 3, and comprising all the land for which water will be provided under the valley bond issue, 315 miles of steel pipe will be required. The district includes 76,230 acres. The Mission district near San Fernando, which contains 11,010 acres, comes under a separate estimate, and will not enter into the irrigation proceedings until it has voted bonds for its share of the general scheme.

The district now provided for is divided into several smaller districts, each of which will have its own trunk line and laterals. Some of these divisions will get their supply from the San Fernando mains and some from the big pipes tapping the Chatsworth reservoir. The districts, with their irrigable area, follows: Chatsworth, 12,325 acres; North Chatsworth, 11,210 acres; San Fernando, 10,405 acres; Calabasas, 12,185 acres; Providencia, 16,160 acres; Maclay, 9110 acres, and Glendale, 4835 acres.

The pipe will range in dimensions from fifty-four inches down to eight inches. The great Chatsworth conduit which is designed to fill the Chatsworth reservoir will have a length of nine miles and will be of reinforced concrete construction.

GERMANS PLAN LARGE COLONY.

GET OPTION ON PORTERVILLE DISTRICT TRACT.

Expect to Introduce System of Intensive Cultivation—Ranch Exchanged for City Property in Los Angeles—Big Tracts will be Planted.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PORTERVILLE, May 29.—J. D. Smith and W. A. Funk of Reedley have taken an option on 480 acres of alfalfa land situated in the Alta district, which is to be sold by Mrs. A. R. Orr of Visalia for a given consideration of $92,000. It is understood that Smith and Funk are acting for a number of German colonists of the Reedley section, who are to take over the land. According to the statement when the option was executed, it will be the purpose of the new owners to divide the tract into small parcels and handle it under a system of intensive farming.

C. A. Henry of Tulare has sold to Mrs. Jennie M. Hoggard of Hollywood sixty-five acres of highly improved alfalfa land on Lindsay road for a consideration given out at $35,000. As a part consideration city property in Hollywood was taken.

F. W. Wheaton, former superintendent of an orange grove east of this city, has bought a six-acre tract of general-purpose land in the suburban district from J. J. Doyle. The holding is said to have brought $250 per acre. Wheaton will use the land for a berry farm.

C. H. Powell of Garden Grove has bought the A. O. Carmichael ranch of 320 acres on the Tulare-Visalia road, the considertaion for the tract being given at $50,000. On the property is a small grove of fine oak trees, and in this grove, the new owner states, he expects to build a fine home.

Dr. E. B. Goodwin of Los Angeles has purchased the E. E. Pollard orange grove in the Exeter district at a given consideration of $32,000. The tract contains forty acres and is planted to trees which will be in bearing next year.

Work has been started by the Success Development Company, largely controlled by Southern California capital, on the planting of 120 acres of its lands in the Tule River district to early navel oranges. Contracts have been signed for the trees and the pumping plant, and orchard buildings have already been completed.

M. A. Boulware, lately from Southern California, who has about forty acres of land in the Terra Bella-Deer Creek district, is planting twenty acres of his property to olives. He has forty acres of early navels in Grand View Heights, improvements on which were lately completed.

Frank C. Palmer has just completed the planting of twenty-two acres of peaches on his property in the Terra Bella district, and has started work on development of a tract of equal size to Mission olives. Water for the property has been developed and trees have been contracted for.

CORONA FARMS SALES.

The Janss Investment Company report sales in its Corona Farms tract during the past week to the following: J. J. Harris, a retired miner of British Columbia, five acres, to be devoted to intensive vegetable farming, $1600; D. Weisman, ten acres, $3200, to be developed as a dairy farm; J. Janway, ten acres, to be set to lemons and garden truck, $3500; T. Jackson, fourteen acres, improved with one-year-old peach trees, $5600; W. J. Langley, six and one-half acres, to be planted to vegetables and small fruits, $2300.

Fittery stayed just long enough to pitch to two batters and get charged with the defeat. Johnny Williams worked the remaining two-thirds of an inning. Whether or not he would have been able to work longer is not known. The game ended then, and thus we were unable to get a real line on his stamina.

STRANGE.

President Baum was in the city, but did not attend the game. This is regarded as strange, for he has a season pass.

Zeb got back in the calcium's bright glare after having been compelled to remain on the bench and coddle his lame finger all week. The finger seems to be sturdy again, and Zeb used it to good purpose in making a number of fine stops.

Perritt wasn't up to his highest standard of effectiveness. He made a wild pitch, soaked a couple of batters in one inning, and was touched for a dozen hits. But about half of the Salt Lake blows had a horseshoe hung onto them.

The Bees came along and placed the game on a 4-to-4 basis in the third. It remained in this condition until the seventh, when the visitors counted one.

GET BUSY.

The eighth found the situation urgent, with the Angels needing one to tie, and two to win. So they got busy, and, after getting the tying run, decided that they might as well finish it up and make the winning run also. They figured that procrastination is the thief of time, and with thoughts of supper uppermost in their minds, they acted on that theory, striking the enemy with force and decision.

Maggert promptly belched forth a double. Mag was the first man up. This was a keen surprise, as up to that time Remneas had had the Angels calling him papa. Remneas was dragged back to the bench immediately, and Fittery sent to the firing line. Metzger sacrificed. This perched Maggert on third and caused him to pine for a long fly to one of the outfielders. Wolter did even better than the public demanded, he exploding a beautiful triple out in right center. This scored Maggert with the tying run, and placed the winning run on third. Having placed it there, Fittery retired with the full knowledge that if it scored he would get charged with the defeat. Johnny Williams then hastened onto the job. McMullen sent a long fly to Ryan. It was so deep that Wolter scored after the catch without a throw being made on him. Rube popped to Gedeon.

MILD PROTEST.

The Bees made but a mild protest in the ninth. Shinn opened with an infield hit. He made a late start to second on a wild pitch that Brooks knocked down, and was pegged out. Poll pitched so sturdily to the next two men that they never reached first.

The game opened propitiously for our side. After the Bees had been goose-egged in their half, Maggert slammed the ball against a beefsteak sign in front of the right-field bleachers. The drive struck this on a line, and the rebound was so strong that it carried the pill almost back to second base. This is mentioned to show the force of the blow, as well as the power of a beefsteak sign. Mag easily reached second. Metzger was retired, Mag being held immobile. He then

LOS ANGELES ATHLETES WIN IN INTERCOLLEGIATE MEET.

A. W. STEWART of Princeton University, who won first place in the intercollegiate championship 220-yard hurdle race at Franklin Field yesterday in the fast time of 24 2-5 seconds, and Harold Wilson of Michigan University, who took fifth place in the pole vault in the same meet, are both Southern California athletes.

Stewart took his training at Citrus Union High School and then attended Occidental College, where he was elected captain of the track squad in his sophomore year but transferred to Princeton.

While attending Occidental, Stewart ran the high hurdles in 15 4-5 seconds and the low hurdles in 25 seconds flat.

"Bo" Wilson won great fame as an all-round athlete while a student at Long Beach High School. He later attended Occidental College for one year and set up a mark of 12 feet 1 inch in practice in the pole vault, but dislocated his ankle before the track season opened.

Wilson has been vaulting in sensational form at Michigan, but was clearly off form yesterday as he cleared only 11 feet.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—The Cornell University track and field team won the fortieth annual game of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America here today, scoring 45 1-2 out of a possible 193 points. Harvard was second with 26 points, one more than the total scored by the Yale athletes, with Pennsylvania and Princeton tied for fourth place with 21 points each. Dartmouth and Michigan divided fifth place honors with 14 points each; Columbia was sixth with ten, while Maine with nine; Pennsylvania State 6; Johns Hopkins 1 1-2; Massachusetts Tech and Bowdoin one each completed the scoring colleges.

RECORD BREAKING

The caliber of the competing athletes representing the twenty-odd institutions of the association was shown by the fact that two new records were established and a third equalled. Wesley M. Oler of Yale cleared 6 feet 4 1-2 inches in the running high jump after a great leaping duel with Alva W. Richards of Cornell, the winner of the Olympic games jump at Stockholm in 1912. Oler's feat displaced the association record of 6 feet 3 1-4 inches, made by Moffit of Pennsylvania eight years ago and the collegiate record of 6 feet 4 inches, made by W. B. Page of Pennsylvania in 1886. Richards, in winning second place with 6 feet 3 1-2 inches, also surpassed Moffit's record.

BAILEY A NEWCOMER

To H. P. Bailey of the University of Maine, a new member of the association, went the honor of breaking the second record. Maine's husky collegian sent the sixteen-pound hammer whistling out 165 feet 3-4 inches in his preliminary trial yesterday, winning first place without further ado and adding 2¾ inches to the figure established by John R. Dewitt, the famous Princeton football player, in 1902. Ted Meredith of Pennsylvania equalled the association record of 48 seconds in winning the 440-yard run.

CHECH WINS PITCHING DUEL FOR DOC'S TIGERS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—Venice bowled over Clinton Prough today, the while Charlie Chech was pitching a splendid game of ball and took an edge on honors for the series that will not be concluded until Monday's double-header is completed.

It was by 3 to 1 the southerners accomplished their victory and every one of the runs was earned, straight hitting turning the trick. Speed, more than anything else, was a feature of the contest, the clubs going through their paces for a full nine innings of play in 1hr. 23m.

PROUGH FOOLED.

Prough looked all over a winner at the start-off. He blanked the enemy for a couple of innings and fanned five of the opposing batsmen before the Tigers got to him for their first run. After that one bit of slipping, he was not hard to find and White's braves engineered the balance of their tallies with no great amount of trouble.

Chech staved off any run-gathering until the last of the ninth. He scattered four hits right up to the finals, when a walk and a drive for Jack Ness saved Oakland a shutout, although, of course, that sort of thing does not help much in the percentage column.

GET GOING.

Venice got going in the third, although when it happened, their chances didn't look particularly bright. Swede Risberg shot a drive past third and hotfooted it to second for a two-base swat. There he halted as Spencer and Chech were fanned. Jimmy Johnston made a running try for Carlisle's hard smash into left and almost landed. The ball didn't stick to his glove and the scratch hit scored Risberg.

Passing up the fourth and fifth, the Tigers were busy once more in the sixth. With Carlisle out on a grounder to Marcan, Joe Berger walked and stole. Johnny Kane flied to center, but Dick Bayless ripped off a left-field single that sent Berger around. Johnston made a good try for the plate, but his throw didn't reach Kuhn in time.

THREE HITS.

It took three hits in the eighth to negotiate the last of the Venice trip. Chech opened with a dubious single to the infield that Marcan fumbled a bit. Carlisle laid down a sacrifice and Berger sent his team-mate as far around as third on a drive through to right. Kane followed the bombardment with a clout to left and Chech scored just before Bayless hit into a double play.

The veteran Chech didn't give Oakland much of a chance, until the close. Middleton doubled in the fourth with one down, but when Johnston poked the ball at Berger,

STARTLING NEW MODELS TO BE SEEN AT "TIMES SHOW."

ANNOUNCEMENTS of the most revolutionary character concerning the 1916 models of automobiles are promised for the near future.

Some of these exciting announcements have come already, as witness the Packard "twin-six," the first twelve-cylinder stock model ever built.

More announcements of an equally startling nature are coming. At least three other firms will put out twelve-cylinder models, and the number of eight-cylindered creations to be placed upon the market later in the year is very large.

The first and best opportunity that the automobile-buying public will have of seeing these cars, so startlingly original, together on one floor and in all their beauty of line will be at The Times Automobile and Flower Show, which will be held in the early fall.

The cars to be shown will not be the rushed-through demonstrators, but the most beautiful products of the factories.

The idea of combining two such distinctive Southern California features as automobiles and flowers under one roof is quite unique and The Times takes great pleasure in announcing the show at this time.

STARR ELECTED DEALERS' HEAD.

Youngest Man Who has Ever Held the Honor.

Other Directors Elected at the Meeting.

Startling Year is Looked Forward To.

L. V. Starr, local manager for the J. W. Leavitt Company, Overland distributor for the Coast, has been elected president of the Motor Car Dealers' Association. The other officers and directors are H. L. Arnold, P. A. Lord, Volney S. Beardsley and W. E. Bush.

Starr is one of the youngest men holding such an important position on the Coast, but he is at the same time one of the best qualified.

His position with one of the largest distributing agencies in the world puts him in a position to have a good insight into the general conditions. The Motor Car Dealers' Association in Los Angeles is one of the oldest in the West and Starr, in expressing his appreciation of the honor conferred upon him, said:

"In a community that stands as one of the first in the land in the number of motor cars such an association as ours becomes one of unusual importance.

"The purpose of this organization has always been to work for all that will prove of benefit to the motor car industry. We have not only had the interests of the dealer constantly in mind, but we are ever ready to go to the front and fight the owners' battle.

"I believe there should be a closer affiliation between the dealers and the Automobile Club of Southern California, and shall work to this end. The owners' interest is our interest and our organization desires to work in harmony with such a club as we can boast of in Southern California.

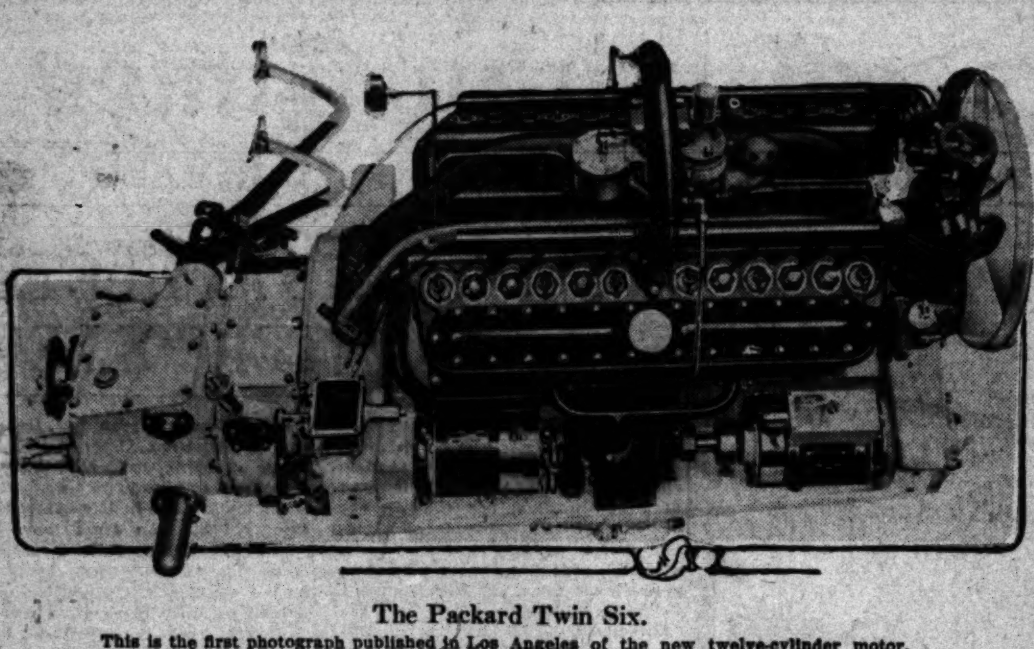
"This promises to be the most remarkable year the motor industry has ever had. Many changes are being made and not only from a trade standpoint will this present year be unusual, but we will see more transcontinental touring parties pass through Southern California than ever before. We must all unite to extend a welcome to these visitors. Every automobile man should go out of his way to be courteous to our visiting motorists. This especially applies to our country garage owners, and they will come in contact with the visitor more than the city dealer.

"Our association will take steps from time to time as will be of benefit to the motorists, and we will ever be on the alert to prevent adverse legislation."

BULK DELIVERY MAKES A HIT.

Mr. C. C. Carter of the firm of Austin Bryant and Carter, local distributors for the A.B.C. brand of oils and greases, reports a big increase in volume of business of their bulk delivery oils by which they are delivering in tank cars in much the same way as gasoline is delivered.

This is an innovation for local companies and according to Mr. Carter the A.B.C. is the only independent company thus delivering automobile oils, and the fact that the volume of business is increasing shows that the idea is a popular one among the auto trade.



The Packard Twin Six.

This is the first photograph published in Los Angeles of the new twelve-cylinder motor.

TWIN SIX MUCH LIKE OLD MODEL.

AVERAGE OBSERVER TO HAVE TROUBLE SEPARATING THEM.

The average observer would have considerable trouble to distinguish the new Packard "Twin-Six" from the recent Packard models, to judge from photographs which were received last week by Earle C. Anthony, Inc., Southern California distributor for the Packard line. The accompanying picture of the new car reveals how little external change has been made in the revolutionary twelve-cylinder model. A hood two inches shorter and with somewhat lessened slope, running boards two inches lower than at present, and platform rear springs combine the new external features of the new Packard.

Options on the new car for August delivery are being signed by Salesmanager E. E. Caister of Earle C. Anthony, Inc., despite the fact that practically all Caister is able to tell "prospects" about the new car is that it will be a twelve-cylinder. Eastern reports indicate that the idea of a "twelve," produced by such a conservative firm as the Packard company, has taken the eastern motoring world by storm. The New York Packard agency signed 161 options for "Twin-Sixes" the first day after the announcement, while Detroit signed sixty-one.

The motor of the twelve is a remarkable piece of mechanism, as photographs received this week indicate. It is wonderfully compact, and the nickeled trimmings and enameled cylinders give it a handsome finish. The two six-cylinder blocks are set at an angle of 60 deg., instead of 90 deg., as are the eights. Wonderful lightness of reciprocating parts in the twelve has been made possible by the small cylinders and the use of a special aluminum alloy in the pistons. The pistons and connecting rods in the twelve weigh approximately one-half as much as the corresponding parts in the previous Packard model. The light reciprocating parts, together with the smoothness of the twelve-power impulses, eliminate vibration, it is claimed, more completely than has ever been done with an internal combustion engine.

The new car will be furnished in two wheel bases. The "1-35" is 135 inches and carries practically the present line of Packard bodies. The "1-25" is 125 inches and takes a new line of Packard-built bodies which are a little less in length.

An advance demonstrator is expected by Earl C. Anthony, Inc., by the middle of June. A demostrator was on exhibition at Indianapolis prior to the big race yesterday, and advices received from there indicate that it ran the big speed event a close second as an attraction.

Business Booming.

OWNER RETURNS TO TELL OF ACTIVITY AT FACTORY.

"THE busiest plant in the world," was the way George H. Hampden, who has just returned from the East, described the Chandler plant. Hampden is a Chandler owner and being in Cleveland on business a couple of weeks ago went to the factory where the Chandler is made. Upon his return he called to tell the local Chandler force of the great activity at the plant.

Hampden was there when the rush for seven-passenger models was on in force. He says the day he was there five carloads were shipped by express in addition to the too many to mention, which went by freight or were driven away by the agents, who came to the factory.

The drive away is always one of the features when a new model is put out at the Chandler plant. Agents come in from all parts of the East and Middle West and no matter what the weather conditions they always insist upon driving home in their new models. This always proves an enthusiasm producer in the home cities.

Don Smith, who was recently in the East, was strongly tempted to drive to Los Angeles, but on account of the rush of business could not spare the time. Earl Armstrong, head of the local company, is planning a trip across the continent, but has not made up his mind whether to make the start from this end or to go to New York and drive back. He will probably make the trip in the late summer.

Word was received from the factory last week that the movement of Chandler motorists toward the Coast had started and last week a dozen cars left the vicinity of Cleveland for the Pacific Coast. Some are going direct to San Francisco, but most of the cars would be driven over the southern route.

A New Sport.

HUP MAN HAS HOT TIME DODGING THE ZEPPELINS.

"THE Zeppelin attacks are now more frequent than ever," writes John L. Poole, European export manager for the Hup Motor Car Company at Paris, to the Hupmobile factory. "In fact, the German raiders are becoming so bold that we are frequently attacked in broad day light. These air attacks are very dangerous for in every instance a great many of the populace are either killed or injured.

"I am not remaining in Paris for amusement or pleasure. That is all past now. The city has taken a sober and somber aspect. Nearly a third of the women are in mourning, and sad-faced droopy-eyed girls, wives and mothers, are to be seen everywhere. It is a pitiful sight, the sorrows that the loved ones at home are suffering. Paris is gay no longer. The cafes and amusement places are deserted and the thoughts of everyone are those of war.

"Saturday night or rather 1:30 Sunday morning, April 18, we were awakened by the Motor Fire Brigade of our section of the city, frantically rushing through the streets blowing on bugles, "garde vous," which means—"guard yourself." This is the signal which is given to the people on the approach of Zeppelins.

"We got up and dressed and descended to the ground floor, where we grouped in the lobby of the large Continental Hotel. This big building covers an entire block and is one of the most beautiful hotels in Paris.

"Inside of ten minutes after the sound of the first alarm, all the street lights were turned out—the city was in total darkness, except for the huge searchlights that flashed over the heavens in search of the German marauders. About 2 o'clock in the morning we could hear the guns of the forts firing on the Zeppelins as they passed over the inner forts of the city.

"Many underground tunnels and passages have been dug throughout the city for refuge during these attacks. Regarding this particular attack, opinions differed somewhat as to the number of sky cruisers in the raid—estimates ranging from two to fifteen. The government report, however, stated that six actually covered the city, while two others came within twenty miles of the limits.

"The nearest point to our hotel where any bombs struck was about three-quarters of a mile away. The reports were terrific for about one-half of a building was blown away. There are a great many Hupmobiles in the French military and police services and mine is one of the few that has not been officially called.

"The morning following the raid I drove the Hup to the principal points of attack and found the damage something hideous and everywhere conforming to the general newspaper reports.

"Following this big raid on the eighteenth, we had hardly returned to our rooms when a second alarm was sounded. All rushed to the lobby and a few of us, mostly Americans, ventured to the sidewalk but were immediately ordered to return by the soldiers.

"Finally about 4:30 o'clock in the morning the brigade returned through the streets blowing bugles to cease firing. This advised the people that the immediate danger was past and another terrrible night was over."

SECOND-HAND SALES GROW.

Owing to the steady increase in the used-car line it has been necessary for John T. Dye, proprietor and general manager of the company by that name, which is now located at Nos. 524-26 West Pico street, to engage more floor space to take care of the increased business.

Mr. Dye, who has been connected with the used-car industry for many years past and who has made a special study of that branch, states that never before in the history of the automobile industry has there been such a demand for high-grade, slightly-used cars as there is at the present time. Recently many sales have been made to out-of-town purchasers.

ARMSTRONG GETS NEW SPEEDSTER.

PUTS RACING BODY ON A STOCK CHANDLER CHASSIS FOR FUN.

Earle Armstrong, president of the Chandler motor car agency, has a new speed creation in the shape of a specially built Chandler roadster.

The new car has a standard chassis, but the body has been built to Mr. Armstrong's special order. It seats two and is of the extreme speedster type.

The car is now in the paint shop and will appear in a most distinctive dress.

Motorists of the United States paid more than $12,000,000 in license fees during 1914.

TRUCK FITTED UP FOR CATTLE TRANSPORTATION.

THE livestock business has been modernized. Its advance is attributed to the motor truck. In the olden days the drover hustled out through the country on horseback or in his little cart. He purchased the stock and then herded it along the public highway or led it tied to his buggy to his corrals.

Nowadays things are different. The buyer scouts through the country in an up-to-date truck. He visits the ranches, selects his stock and loads it upon the truck. At least this is the system followed by Kirschner & Polakof, who recently purchased a two-ton Mack truck and are devoting it to this purpose. A special body had to be built to accommodate the stock, but Mr. Kirschner says he now is able to cover 100 miles a day when twenty-five was the limit by the old system.

"We never had any idea of the possibilities of improvement in our business until Mr. Stoner of the Mack Motor Truck Company showed us the way," he said. "Our best plan was to send out scouts, who selected the stock and either drove the animals to the nearest shipping point or placed them in corrals and had to return later. Now we scout, buy and 'ship' all on one trip.

"The other day we were out near Whittier with the Mack. We met a man who had bought four horses and was in a quandary as to how to get them to town. We offered to bring them in for him and did it—had them at his yard in an hour. It cannot be said the truck system is more expensive, as it increases our efficiency and it certainly is more humane on the animals even if we do start them to the end of life's journey over the gasoline route."

The new triangle motor car route into Yosemite Valley has been opened. It starts at El Portal, connects at Foresta with the Coulterville road into the Merced Big Tree grove, thence to the Tuolomne Big Tree grove, and into the Yosemite Valley via the Big Oak Flat road. The distance is thirty miles, through beautiful scenery. The Big Tree stage line will operate motor stages during the summer.

VENTURA AGENT RUNNING HIS CAR THROUGH STUNTS.

DRIVING from Ventura to Los Angeles in two hours and a quarter is the pleasure jaunt taken by Sam Smith, Ventura agent for the King Eight, several times a week. Smith has set himself the task of covering a hundred miles a day for sixty days by way of demonstrating the lasting powers of the King. The hundred miles daily includes not only the boulevards to Los Angeles and return, but in the course of his runs the eight-cylinder car has been taken to the summit of all the mountains in Ventura county and over the test hills of the region.

During the past week the King has been demonstrated in every hamlet of Ventura county. When he has gone in for a demonstration Smith has asked for the steepest hill and the deepest sand to be found in the vicinity and he has put his car through, nearly always on the high gear. The demonstrations have made the King the best-known car in Ventura county.

Ely, Nev., will be Smith's destination when he sets out with the King next week. He has a number of business interests there and will make a flying trip to the Nevada city, expecting to reach Ely in three days. This schedule will necessitate his traveling part of the time at night. He is an old desert driver, however, and knows all about handling a car in the sands and over the alkali flats and it is expected by his friends that a new record will be established by Smith in the run.

FIRM CORNERS MARKET IN AUTO TOP COLORING.

"IF YOU see any automobiles running around with white, cream-color or khaki-colored tops a few months hence they won't be Reos," said R. C. Rueschaw, sales manager of the Reo Motor Car Company.

"It has not occurred to most people that the European war has affected the automobile top situation," continued the sales manager, "but I can assure you it has and most seriously.

"We bumped into the condition just recently, when we began to consider the plan of making 5000 extra cars over the original schedule, in an effort to catch up with the demand.

"We had little difficulty in procuring other materials, but when it came to tops we found it was practically impossible to procure any fast black cloth suitable for that purpose. This was due to the fact that we have always procured our aniline dyes from Germany and now there is none available.

"Reo purchasing power came to the front, as usual, however, because, just as we were about to give up in despair—for if we could not put fast black tops on and have every other detail up to the Reo standard we would not make the extra cars at all—in walked a man with the startling information that he had discovered 90,000 yards of fast black top cloth.

"Where Reo purchasing power came in was, that, having scouted around and found this invaluable adjunct to an automobile, his next consideration was where to sell it with the greatest certainty of getting his money. His first thought was, therefore, to high him to Lansing, and within ten minutes after he arrived Mr. Smith, our purchasing agent, had secured a forty-eight hour option on the 90,000 yards. He needed the forty-eight hours to make sure that he was covered on all the rest of the material necessary to make the extra 5000 cars.

"I know that some other manufacturers who were not able, a few months ago, when money was tight, to cover themselves on top material, have had to use whatever they could get. The difference won't show up until after a few months of exposure to the sunshine and the rain—but when it does Reos will possess another distinguishing characteristic—Reo tops will still be black."

MOTORCYCLE WEEK FOR WILKINSON.

HAS MANY MAKES ON EXHIBIT IN LOCAL TIRE ROOMS.

Motorcycle enthusiasts desirous of comparing the fine points of eight standard makes of motorcycles have that opportunity provided them at the local sales rooms of the United States Tires Company, where Manager Tom Wilkinson has assembled new models representing the eight leading makes. This is by way of celebrating "motorcycle week" at the tire salesrooms.

The eight cycles make a handsome display. They are just out of the paintrooms of their various agencies and have created quite a sensation on auto row. Dealers in motorbikes have sent their prospective purchasers around to the United States tirehouse to point out the compartive class of each model and show where their make outdoes all the others.

Wilkinson has equipped the motorcycles with tires of plain and fancy treads, chain, non-skid and all-weather types being shown. The cycles represented on the floor include the Harley-Davidson, Indian, Excelsior, Yale, Thor, Merkel, Henderson and Pope.

The Virginia Railway and Power Company of Richmond, Va., the trolley company that bought 100 motor cars to enter the jitney business on its own account, has announced that its earnings during March were $11,000 lower than usual, due to jitney competition. As the city gets 10 per cent. of the gross earnings the city lost $100 in March through the jitneys. The company estimates its loss at about $300 a day, and, therefore, the loss to the city, at $30 a day.

Some Mileage.

SIXTEEN THOUSAND MILES FROM JITNEY BUS TIRES.

HAVING read of the 21,500 miles of service rendered by Firestone tires on a truck owned by Barker Bros., Honore Camagnolle, who drives a truck, called on Manager A. T. Smith of the Firestone branch to relate his experience.

Camagnolle's Republic truck is fitted up for the passenger-carrying business. He operates on East Seventh street and Stephenson avenue, to the eastern city limits. Twice each day he makes a trip to Whittier. He told Mr. Smith that since putting Firestone tires on his truck he has run them 16,000 miles. From the slight indications of wear, he says he expects they will do 10,000 miles more.

"Our pneumatic tires are just as good record makers as the solid tires," Manager Smith said, "but, it seems, the truck tires are most prominently in the limelight right now. However, J. H. Arthurs of Columbus, O., a tourist, came to the branch the other day, as he knows an eastern friend of mine. He drove his Packard to the Coast from Columbus, the trip speedometer showing more than 3000 miles. Each of the tires contained the original air.

"He said he had Firestones put on as original equipment when he bought the car last summer and they have withstood more than 9000 miles of road usage. That he could come through from Ohio without a puncture, blowout or any other mishap that would cause deflation of at least one of his tires seems to me remarkably good luck. Any man who can do that ought to be able to run a set of tires until the car wears out."

Some Speed.

TRANSCONTINENTAL MARK WILL BE MADE OFFICIAL.

IN ORDER to make official Baker's record across the continent, when he drove his Stutz car from San Diego to New York in eleven days, seven hours and fifteen minutes, Harry C. Stutz, president of the Stutz Motor Car Company, went to New York and personally superintended the finish of the record. The car was officially checked in by members of the Automobile Association of America, and then taken to the laboratories of the association, to be taken down and thoroughly inspected.

Stutz made affidavit that the car was an absolutely stock model and Baker made an affidavit that he had made no mechanical repairs whatever to the car during his trip across the continent. He also gave the details of the amount of gasoline and oil used. This part of the record is truly wonderful, considering the speed attained, the distance and rough country traveled.

The official record shows the distance to be 3728.6 miles; twenty-five and one-half miles per hour, considering the actual driving time. The Stutz averaged 10.6 miles to the gallon of gasoline; 440 miles on the gallon of oil. The original tires went the entire distance, the front tires not being changed, while three nail punctures were encountered in the rear tires, and new tubes put in.

Baker states that the Stutz was in as good condition when it finished as it was when it started. To prove this fact the Automobile Association will take the entire car down and examine each part and bearing for wear or breakage. This report will be awaited with much interest, as showing the real condition of a car after such a wonderful trip.

Baker says that it will take another Stutz car to break his record and unless some Stutz car attempts it, that the record will remain unbroken for a long time.

SAXON GETS "ONCE OVER."

ROADSTER DRIVES DOWN FROM BARSTOW.

Owner Hears so Much About the New "Six" that He Drives Down to See it and Buys One on the Spot—Keeps the Little Car to Run Around In

J. F. Lawrence drove a Saxon roadster from Barstow to Los Angeles and direct to the store of Hawley, King & Co., on South Olive street.

"I want to see that Saxon "Six" I have been reading so much about," he said to one of the salesmen.

The car was in the garage ready to leave with a prospective purchaser, but the demonstration was halted for Mr. Lawrence to make an inspection.

"If that car is half as good as my little roadster, I'll buy one," he said after his examination.

"Why, I bat around up there in those hills and out on the desert country with that little thing and it never gives a minute's trouble. Maybe you think it a cinch to drive in from Barstow now. Why, I got forty miles to a gallon of gasoline."

The man from Barstow waited until the "Six" party returned and then went out for a demonstration himself. Upon returning he left his order, but never even suggested "trading in" his Saxon roadster, saying he'd use the "Six" as a company car, when his wife's folks come out, but for his personal use he wanted the roadster.

So far Iowa has registered 17,000 more automobiles than last year at the same time, and the registration department is ten days behind in its mail, with applications estimated at 15,000 still to be attended to. There are now 91,000 cars registered, and it is expected that the 150,000 mark will be reached this year. On July 4 a new law goes into effect, providing for three-year licenses, instead of the one-year registration now in effect.

Kentucky automobile dealers who want to take prospects on demonstrating trips in Ohio will have to get Ohio license tags. This was brought to light recently when a demonstrator for a Covington (Ky.) company was arrested in Cincinnati because his car bore a Kentucky dealer tag. The Municipal Court judge stated that Ohio always welcomed Kentucky motorists when they were bona-fide tourists, but that the roads of the State should not be used for demonstrating purposes without securing Ohio licenses.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

INDIANAPOLIS (Ind.) May 21.—The new Cole Eight in demonstration at Buffalo, N. Y., has been making some astounding records, according to telegrams received at the local plant. E. H. Baker wired the factory last Friday that he had made a run of 129 miles on eight and one-half gallons of gasoline. This means 15 3-17 miles on each gallon. Mr. Baker also climbed Lewiston Mountain Hill, one of the hardest near Buffalo, at a constant speed of less than eight miles an hour, and later, on the level road, made sixty-two miles per hour with the same passengers who were with him on the hill climb.

BATTERIES ARE OFTEN ABUSED.

AUTO OWNERS DO NOT GIVE THEM CARE.

Many Drivers of Cars do not Leave Their Storage Batteries Long Enough to Get Them Thoroughly Recharged—Also They do not Get Them Washed Out as They Should.

C. H. Deaves of the Western Auto Electric says that one of the most frequent causes of dissatisfaction on the part of owners of electrically-equipped cars, is insufficient charging of their storage batteries.

As a rule the owner has no idea of the long time it takes to recharge a battery that has begun to run down. He is usually in a hurry, and wants to get his battery right back as quickly as possible when as a matter of fact he should leave it at the charging station for at least two days.

If the battery man gives in, and lets him take his battery, after it has been boosted on the line for only a few hours, it will apparently have considerable kick, but this is not permanent, and it will very quickly go dead again, as the saying is. The owner is naturally very dissatisfied and often serious injury is done to his battery.

Thorough charging is one of the strong points in Willard battery service. The average car owner will readily appreciate real service, if the man on the job will only take the pains to express to the owner just exactly what a short charge means to his battery, and in our experience they are always willing to do their part.

Another thing to bring to the mind of the car owners is about every nine months, or one year, he can prolong the life of his battery, and get better satisfaction out of it, by having it washed out and new insulators and separators put in.

A wash-out in time often saves the battery owner quite a bit of annoyance and loss of time.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard R. Wallace and Ernest R. Schmidt, of New York, are pushing a 500-pound motor car, on a wager of $1000 a side, from New York to San Francisco. The car is devoid of its engine.

They are permitted by the terms of the wager to get a tow from another car whenever possible. They left New York April 11 and must arrive at their destination by December to win the wager. The amount of the wager will be appropriated to charity.

St. Louis saw its first public auction of used motor cars recently, in which cars ranging in age from one to fifteen years, were put under the hammer. The lot included several types not regularly seen on the boulevards today. As each machine reached its turn it was driven to the auctioneer's stand and then circled the park three times. Twenty machines were sold in a few hours at prices that ranged from $47 for a 1910 runabout to $675 for a 1915 seven-passenger touring car.

The Dallas Automobile Club has adopted the following slogan, "Less noise and more safety." At a recent meeting its president appointed a committee to confer with city officials regarding a plan to compel motorists to make less noise and to compel pedestrians to be more careful of their safety.

The jitney bus in St. Louis has brought into being the jitney cop. The Board of Police Commissioners has appointed a squad of policemen, whose sole duty is to keep the jitney busses on the move. This squad is in addition to the regular traffic policemen at all of the downtown intersections.

The Cincinnati Motor Speedway Company has increased its capital to $500,000. It was originally incorporated for $10,000.

In the first four months of this year 17,200 licenses were issued in Oregon, compared with 16,347 for the entire year preceding.

Fibre Grip Gearless Transmission

If you want an easy-riding car, if you want the utmost in style, if you want the greatest value for your money—buy a Metz. All Metz cars are equipped with fiber grip gearless transmission, which entirely eliminates gear and clutch trouble. There are no gears to strip, there is no clutch to slip. In addition to this, Metz transmission has many important advantages over ordinary gear types.

It is lighter, yet stronger, quicker to operate, and contains fewer parts. It is noiseless, more economical, develops greater efficiency in transmitting power, is easy on tires and engine because of being a flexible drive, does not start the car with a jerk, and provides seven different speeds. It makes the running of the car so simple that a woman can drive it with perfect safety.

AHLBERG SAYS WAR HAS HELPED MANUFACTURERS.

AMERICAN manufacturers have felt the effect of the war in European countries as an increase in their exports, rather than a curtailment, as shown by their reports of February, states A. H. Ahlberg, manager of the Ahlberg Ball Bearing Works of this city, who has kept in close touch with the motor industry since its inception in this country.

Figures compiled by the dealers indicate that, though the exports in machines to Germany has been completely shut off by the war and the shipments to some of the smaller countries cut down, on the whole the exports for February of this year were double those of February, 1914. Shipments of American cars to the United Kingdom, Canada, West Indies, Mexico, Italy, and British Oceania increased materially, and the export to France leapt up by 500 per cent.

The total value of automobile exports from this country in the eight months ending with February of 1914, says Mr. Ahlberg, was computed at $15,716,800, the number of cars shipped out up to that time being 16,883. In the eight months ending with February of 1915, 14,108 cars were exported whose valuation totals $21,605,353.

Automobile exports for the month of February, 1914, alone amounted to $2,461,950, while in February, 1915, the value is given at $4,807,812. It is on this comparative showing for the two months of February that Mr. Ahlberg bases the assertion that American exports in cars have doubled on account of the war, and in his expectation the end of the increase is not yet in sight.

CHEVROLET CARS TO GET A BIG PRICE REDUCTION.

THE Chevrolet Motor Company announce now that they have disposed of all of their 1915 models and are now getting in their new 1916 line, which they predict will create a sensation in the automobile world.

This is the same little car which made such a big hit in local racing circles last year when it made a fine showing against the big fellows, finishing fourth in the Los Angeles-Phoenix road race and also making the non-stop record of 287 miles during the Grand Prix race in San Francisco.

The Chevrolet Motor Company, with factories in Flint, Mich.; Tarrytown, N. Y., and New York City, is the direct result of the work of one man, a man whose name is indelibly linked with the automobile manufacturing industry—W. C. Durant—who was the man behind the gun in forming the $60,000,000 General Motors Company and who after placing this enormous corporation on a sound foundation, retired from this concern and turned his attention, brains and energies to the building of the Chevrolet.

As R. C. Durant, head of the local branch of this company, puts it, "The price on our 1916 cars is the biggest price cut ever made on a light car and it is going to be a big surprise party to the automobile buying public who will see a better and finer looking car in every way over the old car, which we have been led to believe was some car at that."

VIM LIGHT TRUCK HERE.

THOUSAND-POUND CAR MAKES A REAL HIT.

Wheelbase on New Model has been Made About a Foot Longer, Three-quarter Floating Rear Axle has been Installed and Several Other Important Improvements.

The much heralded and discussed new line of Vim trucks has arrived. Sixteen of the already popular light delivery commercial cars were unloaded last week and from the interest manifested in them by the many prospective purchasers their stay on the floor at the local branch will be short-lived.

According to A. L. Brush of the Vim truck agency, the new Vim has come to the front with a rush. In the construction of the new Vim several important changes are readily noticeable, principal among them being longer wheel base, three-quarter floating axles, and three speed transmission with extra heavy gears.

The four-cylinder motor is covered by a unique hood and with the new model radiator the little truck offers a de luxe appearance from the electric tail light to the front bumper.

A business man using one horse can save money by installing the little thousand-pounder.

"The greatest trouble we have experienced in the past," says Mr. Brush, "is filling orders. This has now been eliminated as in the future ten trucks will arrive every week."

Before the final design of the new models was decided upon the chief engineer of the factory paid a lengthy visit to the Coast. This was done with an idea of ascertaining the exact requirements of a light delivery truck for service in this State.

Lancaster, O., is in the market for an automobile fire engine, for which its citizens further purpose erecting a new fire house.

TIRES LAST ON DESERT.

PRACTICALLY TEN THOUSAND MILES MADE.

Local Physician Who Makes Regular Trips to and from the Desert Gets Fine Mileage and has Yet to Have a Single Blowout or Puncture with One of His Casings.

Ninety-eight hundred miles of desert traveling is the mark claimed by Dr. Samuel M. Slocum of this city for his United States tires in a letter to Manager Tom Wilkinson of the local agency. Dr. Slocum has traveled the mountainous country between Los Angeles and the desert month in and month out, and has yet to find cause for complaint on account of his tires. In his letter Dr. Slocum states:

"You will doubtless be interested in learning what all my friends consider the remarkable record of the United States tires.

"Of the original equipment on my car (Cadillac '14) two tires have given me 9800 miles, nearly 7000 miles desert driving, heavy grades, hot sand during the summer, with snow and water in winter; from below sea level in Death Valley to above 5000 feet in the mountains. The other two tires have gone 7200 miles, and are in good condition now.

"I have not had a blowout or puncture with one of your tires, and all the tires were 36x4½ plain tread."

ROADS FROM PORTLAND SOUTH IN GREAT SHAPE.

A DUSTY green Chalmers "30" bearing a Canadian pennant rolled into Los Angeles one day last week, carrying the publishers of the Northwest Blue Book, W. S. Parks and George J. McHenry of Vancouver, B. C. The Vancouver men had just completed a logging and mapping trip all the way from Vancouver for their new Blue Book, which will be published at once for the benefit of the scores of motorists of the Pacific Northwest, who intend to make the journey dow nthe coast this season to visit both expositions.

With few exception the Vancouver men say the road is in excellent condition. From Portland they shipped their car to The Dalles and drove from thence to Lakeview, Burney Mountain and Redding, Cal. They report this route to be much better for the average driver than the Sacramento River canyon route. The Columbia highway, a wonderful road from Portland to The Dalles, which will obviate the necessity of shipping up the river, will be completed early in August, and will be one of the most beautiful roads in the world, according to the Vancouver men.

From San Francisco Parks followed the coast road down, and reports it in good shape with the exception of a short stretch of rough road between Santa Ynez and the foot of the San Marcos grade. There are only thirteen miles between Santa Barbara and Los Angeles that is not boulevard now, and Parks, in fact, complained that the driving in Southern California is deadly monotonous because of too good roads.

The four-year-old Chalmers in which the men made the journey came through without other mishap than the puncture of its compressed air tank on a sharp rock on a high center of an Oregon road. The speedometer showed a total distance of 1812.3 miles from Vancouver to Los Angeles. Incidentally the Chalmers was equipped with a new speedometer, having worn out one with excessive travel, and Parks says from the present condition of the car it is apparently perfectly capable of wearing out several more.

WEALTHY RANCHER GETS BIG EIGHT FOR MEXICO.

THE steamer Prince Albert, bound for Topolobampo, Mex., was held up in Los Angeles Harbor six hours Thursday, while Senor Arthur Gonzales, millionaire ranchman of Topolobampo and known on the Coast as the "Garbanzo King," purchased and had delivered on board a new Cadillac eight. Senor Gonzales will use the car on his great estates in Sinaloa, where he raises immense crops of the garbanzo, a native variety of pea.

When the Southwestern Steamship Company's express steamer finished unloading in the harbor last week and had cleared for the return trip to Mexican ports, Senor Gonzales, visiting in Los Angeles and signed as a passenger for the voyage south, determined to take an automobile with him. Asking the advice of a friend, who recommended the Cadillac car at once, the rancher made his way to Don Lee's establishment, and in fifteen minutes had signed for one of the eight-cylinder creations and paid for it in cash.

Placing the car on board the Prince Albert required a much longer time than the purchasing, however. A consultation was held with the local office of the steamship company, who were finally prevailed upon to hold the ship a few hours until the Cadillac could be sent to the harbor. Climbing into the car, Senor Gonzales was driven to his residence, where his wife joined him, and they were whirled away to the harbor where the Prince Albert lay with steam up. Slings were rigged and the machine lifted on deck, and with Gonzales and his wife aboard, the steamer cast off and started on the long voyage to the Gulf of California.

Immediate delivery has been the aim and practice of the Cadillac agencies for years, though the placing of Gonzales's purchase beats the record for unusual deliveries in the local agency, to date. According to his friend, automobiles have not been in use on the Gonzales estates, and it was only within an hour of the time of sailing that the wealthy ranchman hit on the idea of employing one in his business. Each year approximately 800,000 bushels of the garbanzo are shipped to Spain by Gonzales, with thousands of bushels to the other ports of Mexico.

The Prince Albert left on the 1300-mile trip to Topolobampo Thursday evening at 6 o'clock, having waited since noon for the party to arrive on board with their machine, and will cast anchor in the Mexican waters tomorrow morning.

Decreased earnings, due to jitney bus competition, together with increased wages and taxes, have forced the Des Moines City Railway Company to default in payment of interest on a $2,500,000 bond issue. The total in default is $75,200, consisting of $60,200 interest and a $15,000 sinking fund. Holders of this bond issue are scattered all over the United States, and the trustee for the bondholders is the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, Chicago. The bondholders have not applied for a receiver for the company, but it is probable that they will, according to Emil G. Schmidt, president.

KANSAS CITY PEOPLE HE

DRIVE ACROSS IN AN ANCIENT KISSELKAR.

Fit up Car with Housekeeping Utensils and Other Paraphernalia and Travel All the Way Here; Will Return to Their Home by Way of Seattle and Northwest.

Carrying with them almost every thing necessary to start up housekeeping and enough stores of "wild and woolly" experience to charm the imagination of the most enthusiastic outdoor adventurer, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Welch and Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wise of Kansas City arrived in Los Angeles in their big, mud-spattered KisselKar one day last week, and, for the benefit of those ambitious motorists who have likewise planned on crossing half the continent in an open car, elicited the tantalizing information that "it certainly was the finest automobile trip in the world."

"Some trip is right," said Mr. Welch, when the sun-burned party drove up to the Pacific KisselKar branch, "but it isn't half-over yet, remember," he continued. "No, indeed; not by a good many thousand miles. We're going to stay here a few days and then keep that old KisselKar right on the jump all the time while we're taking in San Diego, San Francisco, Seattle, all the remainder of the Pacific Coast country, and then we're going to drive all the way back to Kansas City."

The two couples in the KisselKar left Kansas City April 20 and came through Hutchinson and Great Bend, Kan.; Stafford and Amarillo, Tex.; Clovis, N. M.; thence to Albuquerque, Springerville, Ariz.; then to Flagstaff and Kingman, Ariz., and then to Needles, Cal.

"At Flagstaff we hit two feet of snow," said Mr. Wise, "and found everybody shipping their cars over to Williams. But we didn't do any shipping. Not while we had our good old KisselKar on the job. We kept right on going through those snow banks even though we didn't register more than six miles and twenty-six mud holes in one day. On another day, however, we hit her up for a record of 225 miles, and never heard a whimper from the engine."

For the comfort of the Welches and Wises every convenience had been arranged before starting from Kansas City. On the car were packed a good-sized tent, two double sleeping cots which could be used in the open without the necessity of putting up the tent; also a gasoline stove, an ice box, full equipment of dishes, a trunk and a rifle or two. Much spare time was spent in hunting and fishing, the entire party being especially delighted with the big, fat frogs' legs enjoyed all along the trip. All fowl and game was dressed and eaten in the quickly improvised camps.

The cost of the trip, including everything such as hotel bills, gasoline, oil, etc., had amounted to only $120 when the party arrived in Los Angeles.

MIDLAND TRAIL SIGNS READY.

WILL BE TAKEN OUT ON ROAD TOMORROW.

Frank Jordan of Auto Club will Spend Two Weeks Placing the Signs—Old 1906 Packard Car to be Used to Carry the 147 Signs. Will be One Each Three Miles.

The task of placing the signs on the recently-mapped Midland Trail from Los Angeles to the Lincoln highway will be commenced early tomorrow morning, when Frank Jordan, chief engineer of the Automobile Club of Southern California, will set out for Ely, Nev., to commence the work in that city. One hundred and forty-seven signs will be erected on this road by the club, an average of a sign every three miles, which should make the road plain and unmistakable for every tourist.

The commencing of the sign work at Ely is due to the desire of the Auto Club to have the signs at the junction of the Los Angeles road and the Lincoln highway in position at the earliest possible moment, for the benefit of the west-bound motor tourists on the Lincoln highway.

The new signs are of enameled steel, and are gay with red, white and blue bands. At the top is the legend, "Midland Trail," while below arrows indicate the direction and distance to Ely, to Los Angeles and to the nearest town of importance.

The work of signing is expected by Mr. Jordan to occupy about two weeks. The trip is being made in a 1906 Packard, which has been converted into a light truck, and which is being furnished the club by [illegible] Anthony. "Cactus Kate," which did the initial logging and mapping of the trail, was not suited for the carrying of the signs and sign posts so the work was given to the old Packard, which has already covered a total of more than 200,000 miles.

With the Master carburetor adopted in the equipment of a number of the leading makes of automobiles for 1916, the factory is finding difficulty in turning out the requisite number of gas mixers. [illegible] time for the run each way is six hours for the 136 miles, and, as proven in the tests recently made by the Yale University Engineering School, in which the Maxwell "25" stood far in the lead in all tests for economical operation, the best mileage on gasoline cannot possibly be made when the speed average is maintained at the point which it is necessary to keep up in order to complete the round-trip run of 272 miles between the hours of 7 o'clock in the morning and 8 o'clock in the evening. The Yale tests demonstrated that the higher the speed, the greater the gasoline consumption. However, this Maxwell has averaged up to date better than twenty-one miles to the gallon of gasoline and the oil consumption is running very low. After making one round-trip on which the car left San Diego just fifteen minutes after its arrival there, it required less than one quart of water to refill the radiator at night. The final figures of this stunt should prove very interesting.

"Our policy is, first, to build the best tire possible regardless of cost. Five exclusive features prove that. One of them costs us $45,000 yearly. Then we spend on laboratory work $10,000 just to learn how to better tires. But we have a matchless output. We have a factory with modern equipment, and we give our users all we save in these ways. Five exclusive Goodyear features are enumerated: The no-rim-cut feature, the "on-air" cure, the "rubber rivets" in the breaker strip, the 126 braided piano wires that strengthen the bead—and the all-weather tread.

In cord tires especial mention is made of the fact that Goodyear cords, size for size, have much larger air space than other cord tires, the oversize amounting to as much as 30 per cent. in some of the sizes.

To the uninformed, it will be necessary to explain that ten gallons of milk weigh eighty pounds and that the cans themselves weigh twenty-three to twenty-seven pounds, each. It's a simple problem in multiplication to prove that the minimum load is 6300 pounds and the maximum 6615 pounds—and that is about three and one quarter tons without counting the driver.

Of course the truck does not go fully loaded both ways—but it does carry that load over forty-five miles of Michigan roads every day, four miles of which are virgin sand—and the entire route is ninety miles.

The truck starts out in the morning from Redford, goes to Detroit; from there it goes to Cherry Hill, where it picks up the second load and back into Detroit; thence home to Redford again ready to repeat the performance the next day.

CALIFORNIA TO PITCH FOR NAVY.

MIDDIES AT WEST POINT TO PLAY BALL GAME WITH CADETS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WEST POINT (N. Y.) May 28.—Twenty-five midshipmen, representing the Navy baseball squad team and substitutes, arrived here from Annapolis this morning, in charge of Lieut. Theobald and two medical officers of the navy, for the annual Army and Navy baseball game tomorrow afternoon. The middies will stay over and play Monday if rain interferes with tomorrow's contest.

Both teams indulged in their last practice today. Blodgett of Bakersfield, Cal., and Hicks of the Navy are expected to oppose Neyland and Oliphant of the Army tomorrow. Word was received here today that President Tener of the National League has assigned Umpires Quigley and Lincoln to officiate.

Tomorrow's contest will be the fourteenth between the two institutions since 1902. The Army won ten times, defeating the Navy every year except in 1902, 1905 and 1908. The Navy's last victory came in 1908 when the middies beat the cadets 16 to 5. The teams play one game annually, alternating at West Point and Annapolis.

Alumni of the Pennsylvania State College living in Cleveland have started a boom to have a football game played in that city next fall between the eleven of Pennsylvania State College and Michigan University.

Hints.

BRAKES MUST BE ADJUSTED.

FORM IMPORTANT PART OF AN AUTOMOBILE.

Brakes Which are Too Tight Result in Sliding the Tires and a Resultant Wear—Emergency Brakes Should Only be Used in Emergencies and Should be Tight.

Automobile owners waste thousands of dollars every year through improper adjustment of the foot brake and improper application of it. The unnecessary tire wear that results adds to upkeep cost. In order to keep the running of automobiles on an economical basis automobile manufacturers are trying to eliminate unnecessary waste through specific suggestions to owners.

Lynn Buxton, local Moon distributor, for instance, cautions his owners to keep the foot brake so adjusted as to bring the car to a gradual stop without locking the wheels. They are also instructed not to use the emergency brake except when it is absolutely necessary.

When the foot brake is adjusted so tight that it locks the wheels every time the brake is applied the car slides on the tires at every stop. The resulting wear is as great as that from running 100 miles.

The emergency is just what its name implies. Therefore it should not be used for ordinary stops. It is not a bad plan, however, to use the emergency occasionally to see whether it is in good working order. This should only be done when the car has almost come to a stop.

A railroad engineer could not hold a job if he ran his locomotive like some owners run their cars, it is pointed out. The service brake on a locomotive has an efficiency of 60 per cent. and that brake is used exclusively except in emergencies. If an engineer uses the emergency brake his job depends on his having a good reason for using it.

Road Dope.

MAMMOTH WASH IS PREFERABLE.

HOLTVILLE PLANK ROAD IS IN BAD CONDITION.

In Many Places Sand has Drifted Over the Planks and in Other Portions of the Road the Boards Have Rotted and Split, Making Passage Almost Impossible.

"Take the Mammoth Wash in preference to the plank road over the sand hills from Holtville if you are motoring to Yuma." This is the advice of Frank Verbeck, the well-known racing driver, who returned last week from a trip to Yuma in "Cactus Kate."

The big Packard carried John S. Mitchell and Carl E. McStay of the Auto Club and G. A. Brock of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to Yuma to take part in the celebration there last Sunday over the opening of the big new steel bridge across the Colorado River for automobile travel.

"Cactus Kate" went to Yuma by the Mammoth Wash and returned by the Holtville route. Verbeck reports that the sand dunes have moved and covered the plank road in many places, and the boards have rotted and split until it is very difficult to follow the narrow roadway for the wheels.

Excellent time was made by the Packard, which negotiated the trip to Yuma by the Beaumont-Banning road in fifteen hours running time. The homeward trip, by way of Holtville, El Centro and San Diego to Los Angeles, was covered in just nine and one half hours running time.

Here it Is.

IDEAL MOTOR CAR DESCRIBED.

MUST COMBINE ECONOMY WITH POWER.

Be Strong and Sturdy Without Being too Heavy and be Comfortable and of Stylish Appearance—Nonassembled Cars are Given a Fine Big Boost.

"Plenty of power without excessive operating cost, a chassis sufficiently strong and sturdy to insure 100,000 miles or more of service, comfortable riding quality and a stylish appearance—that describes briefly the ideal automobile," says O. B. Henderson.

"Such a car is this year's KisselKar. No other can do better at either high or low speed. No other has a better designed and balanced chassis. No other is easier to drive. No other looks better.

"We freely encourage prospects to try other cars and the more thoroughly they first post themselves on the KisselKar, the more secure we feel about getting their order, no matter how many others they put 'through the paces.'

"Besides many points of mechanical superiority in KisselKars, wise motorists are buying them because they are in numerous respects exclusive. They are 'one factory' cars, while most of their price rivals are assembled from parts built in dozens of different factories, and have that 'stock look.'"

Complete touring information regarding the condition of all roads in the South, West and Southwest, together with daily reports of the weather in the different sections, will be furnished free by the Dallas Automobile Club to tourists from all points of the country.

One result of the sinking of the Lusitania has been the announcement by the American line that it will refuse to carry automobiles and trucks on its steamers during the war, as well as other material that might be considered contraband of war. Several other lines have indicated that hereafter they will ship automobiles on freight steamers only, so that passenger ships will be free of contraband of war.

To the Front.

LIGHT ELECTRIC ABOUT TO INVADE BATTLE ZONE.

AN EXTENSIVE market abroad has opened up for the Milburn light electric, according to J. L. Morris, local sales manager for the car.

The commandeering of practically all gasoline cars abroad has left a wide field for the American electric, which has heretofore confined its market almost altogether to this country. The demand for cars for town use in many of the larger foreign cities has become so strenuous that the Milburn officials have decided to take the lead in making shipments of electric cars abroad.

"We look forward to a wide sale in foreign countries," says Mr. Morris. "We have been assured by the enthusiastic reception accorded the car by Europeans who have seen it that the Milburn light electric will prove the most popular electric abroad. For only a light car will satisfy the demands of those who have been accustomed to European construction.

"Foreign car makers have always considered light weight highly essential. The system of car taxation abroad has much to do with this. But in order to keep weight to a minimum they have gone so far as to eliminate many of the luxuries and conveniences which are considered practical necessities on this side of the Atlantic.

"The majority of European car builders do not make bodies for their cars. They sell you the chassis and you are forced to go elsewhere for the body. They have passed up electric starting and lighting for the sake of keeping down the weight and price. In finish, comfort and riding qualities few European cars are the equal of the medium-priced American automobiles.

"And while the Milburn electric meets every European requirement as far as weight and price are concerned, yet it has an amount of comfort, finish and easy-riding qualities that will be an eye-opener to foreigners. Although the Milburn weighs only half as much as the ordinary electric, we have been able to retain the luxury and equipment usually found only on the most expensive creations of motordom."

RALPH HAMLIN ABOUT TO ANNOUNCE A NEW AGENCY.

AT a gathering of prominent motor car dealers, Ralph C. Hamlin heard them talking about their new lines, and the numerous prospective changes. The eight and twelve-cylinder cars, as the most recent sensations, were under discussion. One dealer, who handles three lines of cars, said he is going to be confronted by the problem of selling four, six, eight and twelve-cylinder models, all in the same salesroom, and with the same force of salesmen. He wondered how he is going to do it.

"Well, fellows, the Franklin company has been making six-cylinder cars for ten years, and for that length of time I have been selling Franklin cars exclusively," said Mr. Hamlin. "However, I'm going to spring something in a week or so that'll surprise you. Nor does it apply to the Franklin, for with the fastest-selling fine car on the market that company will not undertake any radical changes.

"I might as well tell you, though, as you'll find it out soon, anyhow, I'm going to take on a cheap car line. I have about decided it, and it will be a car I can sell out here for less than $900. I had been contemplating a cheaper line that would not conflict with the Franklin in any way for a year, and I saw this car for the first time at the Chicago show last winter.

"Always having been exclusively a Franklin dealer, I naturally hesitated about entering the cheap car field, and would not do it now if I did not believe I have a car I can back with my reputation. Several weeks ago I bought one of these cars and had it shipped out. Ever since then my mechanics have been finding out what it is made of. They have taken it entirely apart and reassembled it. I have given it the severest road tests, and every time it has come through in grand style.

"It is a two-passenger car, with all the refinements and conveniences of a high-priced car. It is just the kind a man wants to run around in, and is ideal for the woman driver. In appearance it will line up with any car and not suffer by comparison. I am sure it's O. K., and I expect to be able to make public its name in the newspapers next week."

As a result of the recently enacted Missouri fire insurance rating law, which prohibits rate cutting, automobile owners in Missouri henceforth will have to pay about 50 per cent. more for insurance on their machines.

BASS LAW IS SETTLED; MORE BILLS ARE SIGNED.

THE Governor has signed Senator Mott's bass bill numbered 688, as latest amended. It provides for a bass season opening May 1, and closing November 1; limit twenty-five fish per day; none under 7 inches; none to be sold; none to be taken except with hook and line in the manner commonly known as angling. Sunfish and Sacramento perch are included. The law is general in all districts. It will become effective the first week in August.

The status of the dove law is also settled by signature of SB 769, fixing a season for shooting beginning September 1, and closing December 1.

The districting bill (SB 681 Flint) is now signed also, making twenty-eight districts, and closing portions of the reserve sections in the Angeles and Cleveland forests.

The efforts to keep Bear Lake open to the duck shooters were crowned with success. Special permission is granted to shoot water fowl.

SB 755 (Flint) fixing high penalties for pollution of waters and destruction of fish by explosives, placing a weapon in the hands of the Fish and Game Commission to enforce its demands, is also signed.

SB 853 (Breed) providing for killing predatory animals in the forests under permit from the Fish and Game Commission has just been approved by the Governor. Thus it is made possible for gunners to be in the forest reserves with guns at any time of the year if armed also with a predatory animal permit. The boundary lines of demarcation between the open sections and the sections closed to game hunting are arbitrary, unfenced, and it is to wonder what enforcement can be made under this law as it now stands.

SB 852 requires all wholesale dealers in fish to register catches, receipts and sales fully. It too will be the law.

The fisheries' matters will be detailed later. They are involved and will require careful study, on the part of those who must live and do business in behalf of the public under these new regulations.

Costs less

-to Buy

Certainly does—at $1385, this Studebaker SIX costs VERY much less, hundreds of dollars less, in fact, than any SIX that begins to approach it in QUALITY. The low price is made possible only by the resources of Studebaker—one of the largest manufacturing organizations in the world manufacturing motor cars. You don't have to spend one dollar more than $1385 to get ALL that a SIX can give.

Just take the cars that cost more and study them side by side with this Studebaker SIX at $1385. You'll find one SIX that's priced at nearly $4,000 that has a semi-floating rear axle—one of the old-style axles that Studebaker has long since replaced with the SAFER FULL-floating rear axle. More costly to manufacture—but QUALITY comes first with Studebaker.

Take another of the Sixes that costs a few hundred dollars more than this SIX, and you'll find that it has no brake-equalizer—while the only other brake-equalizer like the one that Studebaker uses is on a $5,000 car.

Other Sixes, you'll find, all of them higher in price, drive thro' the springs—don't care to go to the expense of a design that calls for radius rods, even tho' radius rods save your springs and make the car EASIER-riding. Others are using ball bearings and annular bearings, where Studebaker uses more costly but better Timken Bearings.

And so you can go straight thro' this Studebaker SIX from "stem to stern" and find QUALITY that no other SIX within hundreds of dollars of its price begins to give. Quality that's built into it "—because it's a

-to Run

And so, too, when you get this Studebaker SIX on the roads, you find that you keep on paying less. You find that if it's ECONOMY to buy it—it's even more ECONOMY to run it.

For the simple reason that it's the LOW-upkeep SIX.

Built to be—that's all. Low upkeep is as important as any quality in a car. When Studebaker engineers designed this car, low cost of maintenance was one of the BIG things they had in mind.

And you can see the results the minute you begin to study this SIX. For you'll find, for example, drop forgings and pressed steel used in this car where castings are used in other cars. Forgings and pressed steel are stronger, but MUCH LIGHTER, too, than the castings that other cars use.

And then, you'll find a wonderful BALANCE in the car. The chassis has been simplified by three years' continuous and concentrated study. Every one of its units is placed with the idea of best distributing the car's weight.

The engineers have given it balanced lightness. They cut the cost of upkeep—the cost of tires and the cost of fuel. They made it a car that's easier to drive—a car that steers at the touch of two fingers, a car that hangs to the road at 60 miles an hour and a car with marvelously improved riding qualities.

And with its dignity of design and its elegance of finish, this Studebaker SIX is one of the handsomest cars you ever saw. Your eyes will tell that. But the BIG thing now is to ride in it, to drive it and to KNOW what Studebaker "balanced lightness" means. Come in and see this SIX that costs less to BUY and less to RUN—we'll welcome any test.

INTERSCHOLASTIC SCHEDULE FOR COMING YEAR FRAMED

Many Changes in Relations Between Teams in Major Section of High School Conference — Three Divisions to Gridiron League — San Diego Becomes Rival of Santa Ana.

THE Southern California interscholastic football conference schedule was framed yesterday. With Hollywood and Los Angeles High back in the fold the prep body is now the strongest conference ever known in this section of the State.

It was quite a different meeting at the Y.M.C.A. yesterday from the session held just three years ago. At that time there were but eight high schools in the State playing American football. Representatives of these eight institutions met and organized to fight for the life of American football, which was at that time in a bad way in California.

Yesterday there were more than twenty high schools represented at the meeting. The league was divided into three sections and Rugby is hanging on by the hinges.

There were several changes made in the league. Chaffee Union, the school which has put out such fast teams under "Dutch" Shutt during the past two seasons, has dropped out of the big league. Whittier High has also stepped down into what is to be known as the suburban league. The vacancies have been filled by Hollywood and Los Angeles.

CHAFFEE DROPS.

The annual Chaffee-Santa Ana game, which has been the big game between the two schools for several years, is to be no more. Santa Ana has hooked up with San Diego for the big rivalry.

Three years ago Whittier had an annual Thanksgiving game with South Pasadena High. South Pasadena was too light, and when the Army and Navy Academy of San Diego was no longer able to make things interesting for San Diego, Whittier was put on with the soutnern eleven for the big Thanksgiving Day clash.

Hollywood and Los Angeles are to meet in the big local prep game and the annual Long Beach-Pasadena contest will still be a feature of the Thanksgiving Day pink-sheet programme.

The U.S.C. freshmen are to play several games in the Big Six time. October 2 the freshmen are to meet L. A. High; the following Saturday San Bernardino is to be taken on at San Bernardino, and Santa Ana is to get a workout the next week.

POMONA FAILS.

The Citrus Belt League was represented at the meeting yesterday and, with the exception of Pomona, all the high schools went in for American football. Polytechnic also held out for the bally English pastime, which is sure a goner now, hoping to be able to attract some attention playing the novelty game.

The six teams in the major section of the league are San Diego, Long Beach, Pasadena, Santa Ana, Los Angeles and Hollywood. It was at first expected that San Diego would be shifted to a minor league in the south, but the San Diego bunch came to the meeting well prepared. As there is no competition for San Diego at home, it was elected to a place in the Big Six.

The suburban section has a number of the former major-league elevens, Santa Monica, Chaffee, Venice and many others. There is still another section. The third-raters are the second teams of the large schools, and such schools as Compton, Alhambra, Inglewood, Corona and Bonita.

J. J. M'GOVERN THROWS UP JOB.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—The resignation of J. J. McGovern as assistant athletic director of the Panama-Pacific Exposition was accepted by the Committee of Three named, to remodel the athletic programme of the exposition. The resignation will go into effect on June 1.

The committee, which is composed of William F. Humphrey, John Elliott and Dr. E. G. McConnell, announced tonight that McGovern's office would be abandoned and that his assistants would be discharged.

Although the committee has held no formal meeting, one of the members said tonight that Herbert Hauser, secretary of the Pacific Association of the A.A.U., probably would be chosen as the head of an athletic bureau to take the place of that now headed by McGovern.

Where to Fish.

FISHERMEN CATCHING FULL BAGS ALONG COAST.

ALONG the South Coast a fine season for the pole fishermen is in prospect. Huge schools of mackerel, kingfish (also called herring,) smelt and pompono have already delighted these knights of the rod who fish from piers, while the succulent surf has appeared at the usual favorite haunts in satisfactory numbers. The small fish, it is freely predicted, will give great pleasure to those who dangle their line from pier or strand this summer.

Last season the number of disciples of the rod and reel who fared forth to mid-channel in launches after larger fish was vastly greater than ever before, and it is believed that there will be no cessation of interest in the quest of the game fish of the channel this year.

This branch of the sport is assuming prominence and is engaging the attention of fishermen the country over. Many anglers who are not able to satisfy their appetite for sport off the shores of Catalina Island find the fish they seek, yellowtail, tuna, albicore, barracuda and swordfish, in the channel a few miles off the coast of the mainland. More than a score of launches depart every morning on scheduled trips to mid-channel, carrying the pole fisherman for a modest price a dozen miles or more from shore as desired.

Although the schools of small fish preferably frequent the nooks and bays along the coast that are least frequented by man, good fishing is already reported from every point on the South Coast. Surf fishermen seek Sunset Beach, or Huntington Beach in preference to other places, while the angler for bass goes to Laguna or White Point. For mackerel, kingfish, smelt, or the like, Newport seems to be the favorite spot. If one avoids the snags on the south side of the pier at the end, one can catch a great variety of small fish from the last named pier.

Following is a general summary of fishing at South Coast points:

Laguna: Rock and calico bass chiefly caught here, with a few perch, surf and croakers.

Balboa inlet: Surf, rock bass; Balboa pier, surf, perch, kingfish, with a few halibut and an occasional yellowfin at high tide; Balboa bay, small rock bass, a few halibut.

Newport pier: rock bass, kingfish or herring, mackerel, smelt and sculpin generally plentiful; an occasional yellowtail and halibut, and perch may be caught near the piles. Live bait generally procurable on this pier. Launches go out in the channel after yellowtail and albicore. Few surf along beach.

Huntington Beach concrete pier: Kingfish, mackerel, smelt, a few rock bass.

Huntington Beach wave-motor pier: Surf generally procurable with soft shelled sand crabs; kingfish and jacksmelt.

Sunset Beach pier: Kingfish, smelt, mackerel and perch, with a few surf. Along the beach there is good surf fishing.

Anaheim Landing: Surf, a few rock bass and occasional halibut.

Bay City pier: Kingfish, smelt, mackerel, with a few surf.

Alamitos Bay pier: Perch, kingfish, smelt. Numbers of sharks to be caught. In the bay rock bass and a few halibut are caught.

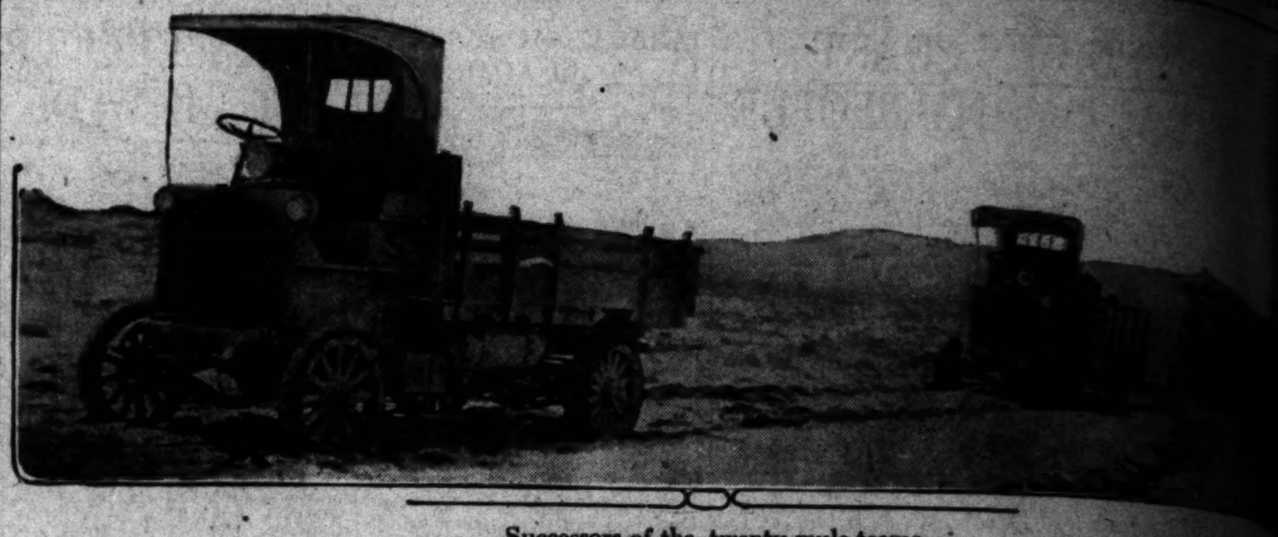
Devil's Gate, Long Beach: Surf.

Long Beach pier: Kingfish, sea trout, perch, smelt, croker and occasionally pompano and halibut. Several launches for mid-channel fishing may be procured here.

Long Beach harbor and jetties: Crocker, rock bass, perch.

San Pedro Bay: Rock bass, halibut, kingfish, perch, and a few spotfin croaker. Launches go out into the channel for yellowtail, tuna, barracuda and albicore.

White's Point: Rock bass, a few surf and halibut.



Successors of the twenty-mule teams.

TRUCKS REPLACE MULE TEAMS ON THE DESERT.

SIX more two-and-half ton Moreland distillate trucks were ordered this week by the Western Metals Company. These trucks are being rushed through the local factory as fast as possible and immediately upon completion they will be driven to Trona to join the fleet of five Morelands already operating between that city and the Wild Rose Mines.

The Wild Rose Mines are famous owing to their rich antimony deposits, yet until the successful operation of the Los Angeles manufactured power wagon in that territory, they lay practically abandoned owing to inefficient transportation facilities.

Mule teams were tried on this strenuous trip and proved unsuccessful. Not only was this method expensive but even the hardy mule could not stand the strain.

The round trip from Trona to the mines is ninety-six miles and it required eight days for a sixteen-mule team to cover the distance hauling only six tons.

This mode of transportation proved practically prohibitive, as hardly a trip was made without the loss of at least one mule. The intense heat on the treacherous Mojave desert and the scarcity and poor quality of the water never failed to take a fearful toll.

Before ordering the initial fleet of five Morelands nearly six months ago the mine directors explained to Mr. Moreland that no less than five different makes of trucks had been tried out without success.

One Moreland was sent for a trial trip, a two and one-half ton worm drive model. The only deviation from regular stock being short wheel base and single rear tires.

The initial trip of the Moreland was a complete success. The round trip from Trona to the mine, hauling two and one-half tons of antimony, was made in eleven and one-half hours.

Four additional trucks were immediately shipped to the little desert town and placed in regular service. They have been in regular service for more than five months and their complete success is the talk of the entire desert section.

The arrival of the six trucks now under construction at the Moreland factory means that the fleet of eleven trucks will move twenty-seven and one-half tons of antimony into Trona every day. This will relieve conditions for the present, but as soon as the capacity of the smelter can be increased other Morelands will be added to the fleet.

BILLIARD EVENTS.

Lusk, assisted by his handicap of five points, scored his fifth straight game in the combination billiard tournament Friday night at the Neims-Brunswick parlor, scoring 40 points to 44 made by Gaskill, and throwing the latter out of all chance in the prize list. The game went sixty-eight innings, Gaskill striving through the last score of rounds to make his one point needed—a three-cushion.

First prize now lies between Lusk and Rose, who have won five each. A few games remain to be played this week. Competitors now stand as follows:

Lusk won five, lost none, Rose won five, lost one; Woodward won four, lost three; Darling won three, lost three; Montana won three, lost three; Gaskill won three, lost four; Randall won one, lost five, and Holladay won one, lost six.

Shook took a good lead by winning from Garner in the horseshoe pocket billiard tournament at Neims & Bird's parlor Friday evening, his fourth straight victory bringing him 75 balls to 42, with high run of six.

Games resume next Tuesday night, with players in the following positions:

Shook won four, lost none; McMillan won three, lost one; Clark won three, lost one; Steele won two, lost two; Wetmore won two, lost two; Garner won one, lost three; Evans won none, lost three; Rosen won none, lost three.

L. W. Evans holds the lead in the city championship pocket billiard tournament, in which the schedule should be nearly completed this week. Relative scores of players are appended:

Evans won five, lost none; Bowers won four, lost none; Kilmer won four, lost two; Maguire won three, lost two; Lee won three, lost two; Harbor won one, lost three; Kennedy won one, lost five, and Scoville won none, lost seven.

INGLEWOOD GRAMMAR WINS.

Inglewood grammar school won the beautiful silver cup donated by A. G. Spalding & Bros. at the annual track and field meet given by the Inglewood Union High School.

It was an exciting and fast meet and was not decided until the final event. The score was: Inglewood, 45½; Jefferson, 41; Hyde Park, 10½; Lawndale, 10, and El Segundo, 6.

Exceedingly fast time was made for grammar schools.

ALL STARS WIN.

The Hollywood All Stars defeated the Hollywood seconds at Hollywood yesterday in a fast game, 6 to 3. The game was featured by the heavy hitting of Harper for the winners. The score:

Hollywood All Stars, 6; hits, 10; errors, 3.

Hollywood Seconds, 3; hits, 2; errors, 2.

Batteries: Schmidt and Monroe; Burwood and Asthold.

Nearly 34,000 cars are now registered in Ontario, which seems amazing for only one province of the Dominion. There are three times as many cars in use in Ontario as in the entire Russian Empire and twice as many as in Austria.

M'MULLEN STAR, SAYS DARMODY.

"The best young player in the country."

This is T. J. Darmody's tribute to Fred McMullen, second baseman of the Angels.

"Considering his experience, there is not a better second baseman in the game today than McMullen," declared T. J. "He is a wonderful fielder, fast and intelligent on the bases and will hit around .300 in any kind of company. McMullen is destined to become a country-wide sensation. Give him another year's experience and he will rank with the best second basemen in the business."

STA-TITE Piston Rings ARE MECHANICALLY EFFICIENT

"Perfect Compression is the Foundation of Motor Efficiency."—Efficiency Ed.

Sta-Tite Piston Rings are made up of three individual interlocking rings, grooved together to give maximum flexibility and resiliency.

The wonderful resiliency of the Sta-Tite ring enables it to automatically adjust itself to the width of the piston ring groove.

Leakage of Compression and Oil is a mechanical impossibility.

Sta-Tite Piston Rings insure Maximum Compression Permanently.

This cross-section shows the Sta-Tite interlocking groove construction. This enables the Sta-Tite ring to maintain a perfect fit as long as the ring is in service.

This groove construction prevents the sections from slipping or "riding" out of place and scoring the cylinder walls. Prevents the "vents" or slot openings from getting in line and allowing the leakage of Power and Compression.

Install a complete set of these Mechanically Efficient piston rings and notice the increased efficiency of your car.

CHANCE DREW BUT $1200 WITH CUBS FIRST YEAR.

Started at Salary that no Class C Players Would Consider Nowadays—Was Advanced to $1500 His Second Year, and so On—However, He Finished His Career as Highest Salaried Manager in Baseball.

BY HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

SHOULD a major league club today or tomorrow or next day tender a minor league player a contract calling for $1200 a year, what would the result be?

Very likely the minor league player would turn up his handsome nose and tell the major league magnate to stick the contract back in his pocket.

Thus do the passing years change the perspective of the noble athlete. There was a time, and that not so very long ago, when the average guy in the bushes would grab any kind of a major league offer, hook, sinker and line. He would almost pay for the privilege of going to the big league out of his own pocket, while $1200 a year made a noise like sudden wealth. Today he would receive an offer of that kind with a sneeze or a hiccough.

NEW MARK.

Frank Chance quit baseball after having set a new mark in the matter of salary. Chance, the last two years of his career, was the highest-salaried manager in baseball. When he signed with New York it was announced that his contract called for [illegible]000 a year, which is equal to the sum received by Ban Johnson and [illegible] K. Tener, big league presidents. Whether or not he actually received the sum never has been definitely established, but there is not the slightest doubt that he was the best-paid manager in the game.

What do you suppose Chance received his first year out? Don't all speak at once, for the chances are that most of you would be mistaken; [illegible] the figures, as it were.

FIRST SALARY.

Chance went from California to the Chicago Cubs in 1898. His contract called for just $1200, and he didn't hesitate about signing it. Frank did not need to follow baseball as a means of livelihood. His folks were well fixed, while other lines of human endeavor presented larger financial vistas. In those days there was not a whole lot of money in baseball from the players' standpoint.

But Chance was big, strong and athletic and had the real American boy's love of virile sport and life in the open. Also he had the genuine boyish ambition to make a name in the big league. In those days the fame of a major league berth was the goal of every urchin big enough to toss a ball around the sandlots. Those were wholesome times.

INDEPENDENT.

Chance didn't need the money exactly, but $1200 just for playing ball seemed rather large. The chances are that he would have signed to play ball in the big league for nothing had he been offered a cipher contract. At that time he consisted mainly of a large frame, raw bones, bow legs, untutored muscles, big ambitions and great possibilities. He had a certain natural awkward ability, and baseball instinct. He also had a consuming desire to become a regular major leaguer, and a genuine love of the game. These were big points in his favor. To become a major league player was his goal. Beyond that, it is doubtful whether he had an ambition at that time. Probably in his wildest forays of imagination he did not picture himself the manager of teams representing the two greatest cities in these large United States—meaning New York and Chicago. Just to be in the majors was sufficient.

Frank was a catcher when signed by Chicago, and as a catcher nothing phenomenal. He was a good backstop, and gave promise of developing into a better one. Any guy who is picked up by the majors must be pretty fair in his own department. But first base was his natural position, and it was there that he gained his greatest fame. The late Frank Selee translated him from a catcher into a first sacker, but not until he had qualified behind the bat in major league company. At first base he developed speed, hitting power and wonderful fielding ability. He compared favorably with Hal Chase, when the latter was at his best. Chase was a bit more sensational in his fielding, but Chance's headwork and everything else considered probably was the better all-around player and of much greater value to his club. Always a heavy and timely hitter, and at one time the best base stealer in the National League, he must rank with the best first baseman of all time. Contrary to the general rule, Chance's duties as manager did not materially effect his work in the playing end of the game.

POORLY PAID.

The belief was general that Chance quit the Cubs independently wealthy. As a matter of fact, he appears to have been poorly paid in Chicago, considering his long service there and the results which he achieved. Only toward the end of his career as manager of the Cubs did he receive what could be classed as "big money," as salaries in baseball are rated. His last year there he received $10,000 for his work, it is said. Other managers were receiving more at the time, although none had made as much money for their owners as Chance.

Frank was a long time arriving at that figure. He received $1200 his first season with the Cubs, as already stated. He received a boost of $300 the following year, meaning that he played for $1500 in 1899. These $300-a-year increases continued until he received the munificent sum of $2400 a season—a figure at which the average "busher" would balk today if offered a big league contract.

SMALL BOOST.

When he took over the management of the club he received a salary boost, but his pay, it is said, was only a little over the $6000 mark when he was winning championships for the Cubs, which is a figure about equal to that received by the passably good player in the majors nowadays. Chance not only was managing the Cubs, but he was playing wonderful ball at first base. Only in the latter part of his career did he receive a salary of five figures for running the club.

EQUALIZATION.

He received an enormous salary for the two years that he handled the New York Americans. This, in a measure, equalized things—offset, as it were, the bush league salary which he received his first few years with Chicago. The Cubs, under Chance, won four National League championships, and the world's title twice. He did much to make a millionaire out of Murphy—the man who went into baseball on a "shoestring."

FAIRY TALE.

From $1200 to $25,000 a year is a far cry, and reads like a fairy tale, but no fairy tale ever contained as many hard knocks as Frank Chance endured.

Chance took a lot of money out of baseball, but, everything considered, he was not overpaid.

Speeded Up.

CARLOAD OF NEW MERCERS IS COMING BY EXPRESS.

THE most costly express shipment of motor cars made will arrive in Los Angeles this afternoon from Trenton, N. J. The cost of this de luxe transportation alone will be [illegible] and the rush cargo will consist of four of the new 1916 Mercers.

The cars were loaded at the Mercer factory in Trenton Wednesday afternoon on telegraphic orders from George R. Bentel of the Pacific Coast Simplex and Mercer Agency in a seventy-foot express car, which was attached to the fastest West-bound train for the Pacific Coast. At a Missouri River transfer point one of the crack passenger trains was held fifteen minutes that it might pick up the express car and thus make up half a day.

On an order sent in some days ago, a carload of Mercers arrived by freight last week and Los Angeles has its first opportunity to see the new runabout models. These cars will do more than seventy-five miles an hour, tests made in the East have shown.

It was due to the great demand for the new Mercers that the Mercer racers were withdrawn at Indianapolis. So much factory time had to be devoted to turning out the new stock cars that the racing models had to be neglected and it was impossible in the short time to get them ready.

"Racing cars are not made in a day," explained Bentel. "I have felt for some time that the racers never would start at Indianapolis, because I knew that every bit of the factory capacity was being used to get the deliveries going on the 1916 cars.

"It will be recalled that there never has been a race in which the Mercer entered that it was not a big factor and those who saw the Mercer at Corona last fall smash all world's records and put up an average of 87.89 miles an hour for the 300 miles, saw the finished product. Could that same car have started at Indianapolis, it would have been a favorite with Eddie Pullen at the wheel. But the new requirements called for 300-cubic inches piston displacement and this necessitated the designing of another motor."

290 Pounds.

MONSTER SEA BASS IS CAUGHT OFF HERMOSA.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

HERMOSA BEACH, May 28.—Three fish on a line, two of these weighing ten pounds and one weighing 290 pounds, was the record made here early this morning by Harry Rogers, a local fisherman. The landing of the fish from a small boat at the municipal pier was the occasion for considerable excitement among fishermen and other who had never seen fish of that size. The largest fish is a black sea bass, and the two smaller ones are baby sharks.

Mr. Rogers was fishing in a small boat about a mile of the municipal pier, using a ninety-six-strand fisherman's line with set lines, when two sharks took his bait from two hooks on one line. The big sea bass then swallowed the two baby sharks and was unable to cast them off before being drowned. It was also hooked internally. The fisherman felt a heavy pull on his lines and played the big fish for a short while. He did not attempt to land the big bass until he arrived at the end of the pier. Davits were then used to haul it up to the pier.

The bass is the largest of its kind ever brought into Hermosa and is rarely brought in by fishermen in small boats because of the heavy load and work in towing. A somewhat similar one was caught last fall several miles off Long Beach. The fish was caught in about 100 feet of water. It will be cut up for steaks, selling at about 10 cents a pound, retail.

The scales are being saved and many persons are takig them as relics and as picks for a mandolin or similar musical instrument.

Amateur fishermen are having good luck here this week. Mackerel and smelt are being caught and are making good strings. Last night those who fished from 4 o'clock in the afternoon on into the night were lucky, yellowfin being caught in large numbers. These fish weighed from one to three pounds. Today mackerel are biting fine. This afternoon yellowfin began biting regularly again. That the fishing season has set in here in good earnest is evidenced by the large number of small bait fish, such as herring, anchovies and sardines, that are coming close to shore.

No More Begging.

GLAZE SAYS TROJANS MUST BE IN CONDITION.

THERE is to be a great shake-up in the athletic system at U.S.C. next season, according to Coach Ralph Glaze. No longer will the Trojan youths get by athletically on reputation. The men who win honors on the athletic field at the local university next fall will have to earn them.

The coach has set his foot down on the conversational athlete. It will be a case of hard work for the men who make the teams. All year Glaze has been bowing to the scrubby athletes. He had to beg men to get out and had to beg some more to keep them out for the teams and there were no men on the field who really trained.

When the men return for football next fall, they will have to be in condition to start a strenuous campaign. There will be no time for conditioning. The Trojan squad is to be run like an eastern varsity and the pace will be so hot after the first few days that only those men who are in condition can stand the strain.

"This idea of men coming back to college and going out for football to get in condition is crazy," says Glaze. "The men who play for me next fall will have to be in condition from the jump. I will not have time to wait for them to get in shape about Christmas time."

Glaze says that he does not care if he has to lose every man on the squad, he is going to enforce strict training and can the first man that he catches breaking training. Last fall he was new at the game in this part of the country; he did not know his men; the men knew no football; and there was no competition for places on the football, baseball and track teams.

After the freshman team disbanded there were not enough men out to make a regular scrimmage practice possible. With hundreds of men in the university there were not enough men out to make a team and a few substitutes. But things are to be different next fall.

Condition is to count for more than half toward putting a man on the team. Blocking and tackling will come next, and the ability to carry the ball and the football reputation, will be of minor importance.

"I am going to have a regular varsity football team next fall if I have to take the poorest men in the university," said Glaze last night. "There will be competition for places and the men will not have their places cinched from the start, and I will not have to beg them to come out.

"The way things ran last year, it looked as if the coach was afraid of his men. It will be a different story next fall. The men must have the spirit. They must get in condition and stay in condition. They must do athletics like athletes. The pace will be fast and it will either make or break some of these smiling athletes who have been babied through high school and part of college."

PELL BEATS COLSON.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

BALTIMORE, May 28.—Theodore R. Pell of New York successfully defended the challenge cup in the finals of the Baltimore Country Club's tournament this afternoon, defeating Fred C. Colson of Baltimore, who recently won the State championship. Pell won in straight sets, the scores of which were 6-3, 6-1, 6-3.

When a car belonging to a member of the Toledo (O.) Automobile Club is stolen a special operator in the Home Telephone exchange will spread the alarm to the police and to automobile clubs in thirty towns within a radius of 125 miles of Toledo. Such an arrangement has been made by the club, and so perfectly has the schedule of calls been arranged that every road out of Toledo is covered, so that the thief will have a hard time getting out of the telephone circle without being caught.

INGLEWOOD WINS BAY LEAGUE TITLE.

By bunching their hits in the third and seventh innings Inglewood won the final game of the Bay League, trimming Huntington Park to the tune of 6 to 4.

Inglewood scored three in the third, only to be tied by Huntington Park in the fourth. Inglewood cinched the game in the seventh by scoring three runs on three hits and a double by Grice.

Casey of Huntington Park caused a slight flurry in the ninth with a home run on the roof of the High School, but Oestreich fanned out the next three and the pennant belonged to Inglewood.

On Tuesday Inglewood plays Norwalk at Alhambra in the semifinals of the Southern California championship.

Goodyear Passes Goodyear

$500,000 Better
Yet Users Pay $5,000,000 Less

Note these amazing facts:

Goodyear tires, as built this year, will cost us $500,000 more than if built like 1914 Goodyears.

That's because of improvements.

Yet this year's output will cost our users some five million dollars less than if sold at 1914 prices.

That's because of a big price reduction, made February 1st. It was our third in two years, totaling 45 per cent.

Why Better Tires?

You ask why we add that half-million dollars in face of such reductions.

We have always added every betterment our experts could discover. And we spend on research $100,000 yearly just to seek improvements out.

Goodyears may pass Goodyears, but we make sure that no rival ever can.

What Extras Cost

Goodyear Fortified Tires embody many extras. Five of them are features found in no other tire that's built. Others are found in but few.

Based on current output, those extras this year will cost us $1,635,000.

That is, if we omitted our exclusive features, which all others do omit—

And other protections which most makers omit—

We could probably add to our profits this year more than 1⅛ million dollars.

But What of You?

But Goodyear users would pay. Those extras save our users many times the cost to us.

In those extras lies the reason why Goodyear outsells any other tire. And in that mammoth output lies the reason for the value that we give.

Think of these things when other tires are offered.

Each Goodyear extra means a saving to you.

Any dealer, if you ask him, can supply you Goodyear tires. ([illegible])

"Facts don't blow out."
—Mr. Squeegee

The people who built the Pyramids did a job that has never been beaten.

From foundations to cap-stones they were constructed to endure.

There was no overweight anywhere and no part was too weak or too light to match the other parts.

Hence the lasting qualities of the Pyramids.

Diamond Tires are built, as the Pyramids were built, to last.

Every part is made to wear just as long as the other parts endure.

Consequently Diamond Squeegee Tread Tires made a record in 1914 that has never been matched.

Send for our book of letters from dealers who sold Diamond Tires in 1914.

It tells how more than 99 out of every 100 of the more than half a million Diamond Tires sold last year gave maximum service at minimum mileage cost.

It is yours for the asking.

Diamond Squeegee Tires are sold at these "FAIR-LISTED" PRICES:

SALT LAKE ATTENDANCE IS BEST IN THE LEAGUE.

SALT LAKE CITY (Utah) May 25.—When Henry Berry, for whom Salt Lake bugs have a soft spot in their hearts as a result of his efforts to assist them in landing a Coast League berth, made his last visit to this city he remarked that "Salt Lake City is the salvation of the league."

The San Francisco Club owner, of course, meant that because of the inclement weather on the Coast, this city alone has been drawing real gates at the games. He did not mean that, but for Salt Lake's addition to the circuit, the league might have gone broke at the very outset, but, at that, his remarks have given the fans all over the circuit something to think about.

Local officials, like all others on the circuit, refuse to let even some of the stockholders in on the figures of actual money taken in at the gates in this little "jay town." By keeping his ears open and his mouth shut, though, The Times correspondent has been able to form the hunch that Coast League baseball in Salt Lake has drawn in a manner that is far beyond even the most optimistic expectations.

In its twenty-five games played at home to date, Salt Lake fans have attended Coast League games at the average rate of 3000 and some odd paid admissions per game. With 50 cents, 75 cents and a dollar prices in vogue, 52½ cents is considered an average price of admission. It is not a difficult matter, therefore, to figure out that every visiting manager who has journeyed to this city has gone out with better than his $2000 weekly guarantee.

It is also evident, therefore, that Salt Lake City has made good as its boosters claimed it would. It is extremely doubtful whether or not these attendance figures can be maintained during the hot summer months. Salt Lake is a great resort-loving city and all of the places of summer amusement will open on Decoration Day. In past years, these places have drawn all the way from 5000 to 10,000 people every Sunday. It remains to be seen whether baseball will be able to compete with the resorts or whether baseball attendance will drop off about half until after the middle of August as it always has in past years.

Most of the local directors believe that the resorts will not cut into the baseball crowds, but that, on the other hand, class AA baseball has taken such a hold of local fandom that the attendance will increase if anything.

If the crowds do increase it will become absolutely necessary for the club to increase the present seating capacity. The stands and bleachers, as they are today, will hold approximately 6000 people when crowded to their utmost. They have been filled to overflowing every Sunday as it is.

It has been encouraging to the directors to note how the attendance has continued to increase, for they believe that it demonstrates that local people pay their money to witness classy baseball and that they have not been going there out of mere curiosity, which might wear out as the season progresses.

Roxie was thrown out at third and the hopes of the Oaks were crushed.

Kuhn drove out a two-bagger in the fifth, but there were two down and Guest couldn't help the cause. In the seventh, a walk for Ness and a single for Kuhn, with two down, availed nothing for the Oakland team.

They had their reward in the ninth. Marcan sent a fly to center field and Middleton was walked. He reached second as Johnston grounded infield and was sent along home on a nice center-field hit by Ness. Gardner flied to right to retire the side and end the session. The score:

GAMBLING TO BE SUPPRESSED.

AL BAUM SAYS POOLS ARE SURE TO HURT GAME.

Players Buy Lottery Tickets on Their Batting and Get Jealous of Each Other, is Rumor—White Says Betting Killed Racing and Boxing and will Ruin Baseball.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—All forms of gambling on baseball games in the Pacific Coast League must be suppressed, A. T. Baum, president of the league, said last night before he left for Los Angeles to investigate alleged gambling.

"Any gambling scheme is sure to hurt the reputation of baseball, the very life of which depends upon its being kept free of every taint," President Baum said. "We have done our best to prevent the operations of gamblers who would like to sell pools or make bets upon baseball and several arrests and convictions have helped to drive them to cover. We shall keep on their trail and shall stamp out as much of it as possible."

In San Francisco there has been no open pool selling, but it is said there has developed a lottery game in which tickets are sold on player combinations, which depend upon the hits made by the players. It is said players have been buying tickets for several weeks. The practice is said to have had a bad influence as there has been jealousy over hitting averages and complaints over decisions as to hits. President Baum said the lottery scheme would be stamped out.

G. Harris White, manager of the Venice team, said:

"Baseball is the one great sport that is left to us and it must be protected at any cost. Gambling killed horse racing and pugilism. Why should we let it kill baseball? Even the apparently harmless lottery game will reflect discredit upon baseball and my opinion is that it should be suppressed at once."

Poor pitching by Philadelphia twirlers, errors by Cravath and Becker and a double by Schmidt in the fourth, which scored three runs, were principal factors. The score:

FOUR BALLOONS TO RACE EASTWARD.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—Four or more big racing balloons with experienced pilots will start in a long distance race eastward from the Panama-Pacific Exposition grounds on the night of June 9, according to an announcement made today by officials in charge of aeronautical contests.

The four already entered are: The California, Edward Unger, pilot; The Queen of the Pacific, Clarence Drake of Spokane, pilot; the Venice, Leon Brooks, pilot; and an unnamed balloon just completed in Pasadena and entered by George B. Harrison of Los Angeles.

Honolulu, despite the fact that it is one of the ideal sports of the world for all kinds of outdoor sports, has no athletic field of any consequence, no place where polo, football, baseball, horse racing, bicycle racing, motorcycle racing, automobile racing and athletic sports can be carried on.

Ted Faulk, Aberdeen (Wash.) High School gridiron and track star, may enter Dartmouth University this fall.

A CHEW

Buddy then tripped and slid about feet on his face, at the same losing his grip on the pill. It be scored only as a hit. Buddy came clear in to the plate. Many that he wanted to protest decision, to wit: that he had the ball, but it seems that simply wanted to borrow a chew of from Nick Williams. After had returned to his post of Hall emitted a wild pitch. Mc almost tore third base from fastenings with a single that Wolter. Mac stole second on who was thinking about fine. Financial matters and business responsibilities are sure to effect player's work. About everything possible having happened, Hall Rube and called it a day's Remneas went in and retired whereupon Zeb, responding the cheers of the ladies and gents, scored Mac and Rube with a single to center. Brooks, in to save his bean, dodged. His hit the ball and he accidentally to Hannah.

The Bees began to take notice in second, when an error by Metzger, a double by Tennant, a single by Hannah and a wild pitch promoted They tied the score in the third singles by Gedeon and Ryan a tempestuous double by Tennant.

SAD.

seventh witnessed a sad transformation in the score, when the Bees the lead. Hannah bunted, and to first in spite of the fact that McMullen and Abstein all to capture the pill. Remneas a pop-up back of the pitcher out of everybody's reach. Metzger chased over, took it on the bound made a low heave that was par. Shinn singled Hannah and Orr forced Remneas. and Orr advanced on a double steal, Brooks's throw to Metzger on the wrong side of the base. fanned Gedeon. He didn't like evil looks and passed him This seemed like taking chance, but Poll's judgment vindicated when Zacher zodiacked Rube.

VICIOUS.

These things made Poll wild and and in the eighth he soaked and Faye as fast as they walk up to the plate. Poll have thought that he was in bowling match, and that the players were duck pins. This placed two with none out, and gave rise to freak double play. Poll slammed ball at Hannah. The latter and his bat hit the ball by accident. The result was a weak grounder to Abstein. Bill whipped to Metzger, forcing Tennant. had not run the grounder and was doubled when Metzger to McMullen, covering first. advanced to third on Metzger's and McMullen could have him by returning the ball to for the completion of a triple had he thought about it. Remneas popped to Abstein. It was after this that Maggert and Wolter got busy with the lurid wallop. The score:

BABY CAR RACE IN SAN DIEGO.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN DIEGO, May 29.—The miniature Velie, driven by A. Bashore, won the miniature automobile classic this afternoon at the exposition. Bashore's time for the twenty-five-mile race was 40m. 53 4-5s. The Velie was seven laps ahead of the KisselKar, driven by W. Collins, which came in second. The Overland, driven by R. Grenfall, made a dashing start and was a lap and a half ahead of the others after the third lap, but magneto trouble put the car out of the race.

Other entries were the Indian, driven by C. S. Reese, and the Mercer, driven by Richard Collins. The course of the miniature race was a mile in length, going down the Isthmus and around the Alameda and back to the Isthmus. There are two sharp curves in the course that added to the excitement of the race of the tiny cars, which was witnessed by a great crowd.

The race today was the first of a series of races of the miniature cars to be held each Saturday.

PARTY STARTS ON A LONG TRIP.

TRAVELLING BY AUTO TO OLD MISSOURI HOME FROM COLTON.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

COLTON, May 29.—All the way to Missouri by automobile is the plan of a summer outing trip mapped out by a party of local people who started today on the first lap of the long journey. The travelers are Daniel L. Hoak, his mother, Mrs. A. C. Hoak, and his two sisters, the Misses Margaret and Edna Hoak. Their destination is Greenridge, Mo., their old home and where they are to visit until September.

The trip is to be made in a five-passenger Overland and a complete camping outfit is being taken along so that camp can be pitched wherever night overtakes them on the way. The route of travel for the journey is via the National Old Trails, or the old Santa Fe trail, which will be followed as far as Kansas City. Enroute they will stop off at the Grand Canyon. Coming home to Colton the party will travel over the Lincoln Highway and visit the exposition in San Francisco.

RAIN AND COLD HURTS BASEBALL.

OVER ONE HUNDRED EASTERN GAMES POSTPONED THIS SEASON.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, May 27.—Rain and cold weather have caused 102 baseball games to be postponed in the National, American and Federal leagues since the start of the season, six weeks ago, according to figures compiled here today. The figures set a record for major league postponements.

The Federal organization suffered heaviest, having 45 games postponed. The National had 29 and the American 26. In Chicago the Federals have been obliged to postpone eight of the last 16 scheduled games.

Neither Leland Stanford nor University of California will take part in the intercollegiate rowing races scheduled for San Francisco the latter part of July. The promoters hope to secure the entrance of varsity eights from the University of Washington (Seattle) and the winner of the Poughkeepsie University regatta to be rowed on the Hudson on July 26 and possibly Harvard University eight to make the trip to the Pacific Coast.

THREE BRAVES IN FIRST TEN.

Ty Cobb Continus to Run up His Average.

Tigers Lead White Sox by a Small Margin.

Pierce of Cubs and Benz of Sox Leading Hurlers.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, May 29.—Every team in the National League except St. Louis has a representative among the ten leading hitters, according to averages published here today, including the games of last Wednesday. Boston leads in the number with three. Fred Luderus, Philadelphia, continues to set the pace with a percentage of .390. Then come T. Clarke, Cincinnati, .370; Good, Chicago, .364; Connolly, Boston, .351; Groh, Cincinnati, .346; Daubert, Brooklyn, .337; J. Smith, Boston, .336; Merkle, New York, .325; Hinchman, Pittsburgh, .315; Rudolph, Boston, .310.

Chicago and Cincinnati are tied for the leadership in club batting at .261. Bresnahan's eleven thefts still are high-water marks. Saier of Chicago holds scoring honors with twenty-eight runs.

LEADING HURLERS.

With five victories and no defeats Pierce of Chicago leads the pitchers; Coombs, Brooklyn, is credited with three wins and no loses; Standridge, Chicago, with two and none; Meadows, St. Louis, two and none; Lavender, Chicago, two and none; Alexander, Philadelphia, eight and two; Mammaux, Pittsburgh, four and one.

Ty Cobb ran his average up from .400 to .427 in the past week and has accumulated nineteen stolen bases, leading his rivals of the American League as well in runs scored—a total of forty-one. Fournier, Chicago, has lost second place in batting to two of his team mates. Following Cobb the leaders are: Daly, Chicago, .421; Russell, Chicago, .400; Fournier, Chicago, .378; Jackson, Cleveland, .355; Crawford, Detroit, .341; Ruth, Boston, .333; Kavanaugh, Detroit, .322; Lajoie, Philadelphia, .307; Shotten, St. Louis; Strunk, Philadelphia, and McInnis, Philadelphia, tied for tenth at .305.

Detroit with .265 and Chicago with .260 lead the clubs. Credited with four victories and no defeats Benz of Chicago ranks first among the pitchers. Jones, Cleveland, has won one and lost none; Faber, Chicago, nine and one; Fisher, New York, six and one; Dauss, Detroit, seven and two.

KAUFF AGAIN.

Bennie Kauff of Brooklyn, hitting .407, still tops the Federal Leaguers, and his manager, Lee Magee, is next with .389. Then come Kirby, St. Louis, .387; Flack, Chicago, .371; Campbell, Newark, .362; Tinker, Chicago, .357; Myers, Brooklyn, .348; Blair, Buffalo, .347; Cooper, Brooklyn, .341; Evans, Brooklyn, .339.

Magee is ahead in stolen bases with fourteen, one more than Kauff. Evans helps the Brooklyn monopoly of honors by scoring the most runs, twenty-eight. Brooklyn with .298 and Newark with .268 lead in team hitting.

Leading pitchers are: Prendergast, Chicago, 4 and 0; Herbert, St. Louis, 1 and 0; Allen, Pittsburgh, 7 and 2; Cullop, Kansas City, 6 and 2; Dickson, Pittsburgh, 3 and 1; Lafitte, Brooklyn, 5 and 2; Seaton, Brooklyn, 7 and 3.

GUNS AND MOTORS.

Ingenious Vehicles Have Been Designed for the Transportation of Heavy Ordinance to the Firing Line.

[Pearson's Weekly:] The speed with which a commander can transfer his guns from one point on the battlefield to another often spells the difference between success and defeat for his troops. For this reason a number of ingenious vehicles and portable guns have been invented which enable the modern general to hustle his artillery for miles across country with a minimum waste of time.

The motor car, of course, plays an important part in such undertakings. Light guns which are not sufficiently heavy to require haulage by the usual steam traction engines are carried on specially designed motor cars, which can transport artillery across country at a speed of twenty miles an hour.

These lorries have long rails pivoted onto them, which, when swung downward, stretch from the body of the vehicle down to the ground. Their purpose is to enable a gun to be run up onto the lorry in quick time.

The wheels of the gun fit on to hollowed-out rails, the ends of which rest on the ground, and the weapon is then pushed up on to the vehicle. When the gun is in place these rails bend right over and grip the weapon's wheels, and thus hold it perfectly rigid, so that the inevitable jolts of speeding the motor over rough country shall not dislodge the gun.

The weapon is, of course, quickly slid off the transport car by swinging back the steel rails and pushing the gun down them backward.

For transporting heavy artillery guns motor cars of high power and, in some cases, steam traction engines are called into use. Weighing several tons and well armored, these vehicles are not capable of great speed, their main use being that of carrying these giant weapons across rough ditch-strewn country.

The wheels of the lorries have round their rims a thick continuous chain composed of thick flat sections of iron. In this way the vehicles can drag themselves over hillocks and marshy ground like huge caterpillars, for the movable metal feet climb over obstructions and run down one side of a broad ditch and up the other bank with marvelous precision.

Some of the heavier vehicles have a long, continuous chain composed of metal slabs, which runs round both back and front wheels, thus creating a line of iron "feet," which crawl over the roughest country.

For traveling about the firing line and delivering attacks where the enemy's onslaughts are the fiercest, a new form of armored motor car has been invented. This is a powerful motor vehicle, heavily armored and mounted with about six quick-firing guns.

When the car reaches a point of vantage its sides, containing the guns, are swung outward until they are in a straight line with the driver's box. These movable partitions are hollow and contain men and guns.

They slide outward on wheels, and can be pushed backward or forward with ease. Such vehicles are of great value for quickly transporting guns from one point to another.

CITRUS BELT LEAGUE ADOPTS AMERICAN GAME.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

RIVERSIDE, May 29.—With the exception of Pomona, the High Schools composing the Citrus Belt League will play the American game of football next season. This decision was reached at a meeting of representatives of the league held here today when eight out of twelve votes were cast in favor of departing from the Rugby style of play.

Pomona announced that it would not play the American game, and the school was accordingly given permission to play with teams playing Rugby while still retaining its membership in the league with reference to other sports.

With the exception of Pomona, every representative stood ready to accept the decision of the majority. Following the vote, a committee was appointed to meet in San Fernando next Saturday for the purpose of arranging a schedule for the American game. The schools in the league comprise Riverside, Redlands, San Bernardino, Colton, Pomona, Hemet, Corona, Chaffey Union and Chino.

The records made at the recent field meet here were accepted and medal erroneously awarded to Chestnut of Redlands for the broad jump was ordered transferred to Graser of Pomona.

Too Much Handicap.

SINSABAUGH IS DEFEATED IN TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

THE tournament of the Southern California Tennis Club continued its struggle for life all day yesterday. There was not a great deal to keep it, or interest, or anything else alive, but it is still on the list of the living. It is hoped that Monday will be the red letter day of the meet and that some real tennis will burst into view.

There seemed to be a bad epidemic of defaulting in the air yesterday and most of the progress (if it may be called that) was accomplished in this way. About three-quarters of the matches have consisted of unexciting defaults. Defaults are all right in their place, but they should be few and far between and such was not the case yesterday.

IN SEMI-FINALS.

Wilson is the only man who has succeeded in getting in the semi-finals. This does not mean that there will be only one person in the next-to-the-last round; Mr. Wilson got there first, that's all. Several others are expected to be in this class by next Monday.

The match between Sinsabaugh and Wilson was one of the best run off. Both men were playing in excellent form and the fact that Sinsabaugh was beaten so badly may be blamed, partly, to the handicap of his opponent. Wilson had thirty points each game and this is discouraging to say the least. When you lose one point and hear the umpire say, "Forty-love," it has a tendency to take the pep out of a fellow.

Sinsabaugh has an awful assortment of serves and he uses them, one by one, in a most confusing manner. His underhand serve is the worst. When the ball hits the ground it has a fit and bounces in seven or eight directions. This makes it hard for the receiver who has just one paddle to hit with. Wilson's smash and drives saved his life in the match. This gentleman has a knack of swatting the ball in a tough and ferocious way. One of his smashes, yesterday, went over the fence and lit on top of a gasoline-filling station half a block away. He can do better than that if he feels like it.

Yesterday's results:

Second round: Sheldon defaulted to Sinsabaugh; Boyle defaulted to Grannis; Ferguson defeated Weller, 6-4, 6-3; Wilson defeated Godshall, 6-3, 6-2; Barkelew defaulted to Perry; Darsu defeated Sheldon, 6-2, 7-9, 6-4; Belden defaulted to Stillwell; Shook defeated Brent, 6-2, 6-4; Barber defeated Bower, 6-4, 6-8, 6-4; Barker defeated Harriman, 6-4, 3-6, 6-4; Kneymeyer defeated Birdsall, 5-7, 6-3, 6-4; Donley defaulted to Brown; Jones defeated Davis, 6-0, 6-2; Winnie defaulted to Ford.

Third round: Sinsabaugh defeated Grannis, 6-2, 8-6; Ferguson defaulted to Wilson; Barker defeated Barber, 6-4, 6-2; Jones defeated Ford, 6-3, 6-4.

Semi-finals: Wilson defeated Sinsabaugh, 6-4, 6-1.

The finals will be played off Monday.

ARMSTRONG AND HALL WIN IN MUNICIPAL PLAY.

BY ALMA WHITAKER.

THE Griffith Park Golf Club held the qualifying round for its first tournament yesterday and was magnificent enough to give four qualifying prizes.

W. L. Hall won the gross prize, with 75, which is pretty well his regular score on those links now.

And Burl Armstrong won the best net for class A, which comprises handicaps to 15, with 85-15-70.

Class B prize was won with the dazzling net score of 64 on 28 handicap, and two gentlemen tied for class C prize, with a net 71—E. H. Dellman and C. H. Backrack. Their scores in first-round match play will be taken for the play-off of the tie.

HANDICAPPING.

The Handicapping Committee—W. B. Hall and James Law, the professional—is to be congratulated on the handicapping. It was no easy task to handicap so many unknown players, but the results show that they did not make many mistakes.

It was a great day for city golf, fifty-three entries, and, as the links were crowded with players not taking part in the tournament as well, they are to be congratulated on their courtesy and amiability in allowing the tournament players to play through. Every one entered into the spirit of the occasion and helped forward the good work of making the public links thoroughly enjoyable.

SUPERLATIVE.

W. L. Hall, the arch-winner, had a superlative home 9. He played the first six holes so poorly that he despaired, but his game improved from the seventh on. His 40 for the first nine was followed by a long succession of 4's and 3's and but for missing a putt for a 4 on the eighteenth he would have had a 74.

Burl Armstrong, the best net man, was driving sumptuously, on the green in 2 every time. But, alas, for the pesky putts! It is that department which demands that 15 handicap.

There was inspiration in the air, for most of the players who modestly regard themselves as hopeless dubs, bettered their previous bests.

Robert Reed, for instance, who won that class B prize. He did the first, third, fourth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth in par, which is joy unconfined for a 28 handicap man, as you must admit.

PAR HOLES.

C. D. Hegerman missed a prize on the class basis, but he had a net 67 on 26 handicap, with several par holes. G. J. Bower, a 20 handicap man, had a row of 4's from the eighth to the twelfth, inclusive, that would have delighted a star player. He was so elated that he scorned the sweeper on the last green—and thereby lost two strokes to temper his pride. But he got a net 70.

Hugh Blue had a net 72 on 25 handicap, the seventh and tenth in a stroke under par. Charlie Mackey had a net 70 on 19 handicap, C. H. Conk a 72 on 12 handicap, W. W. Talbott a 72 on 24 handicap, J. L. Martz a 73 on 27 handicap and H. L. Valentine a 74 on 26 handicap and so on.

E. L. Ralph had the second best gross score of the day, with a 76. He is one of their lowest handicap men out there—4. L. Cowing, who was expected to win the pot, was a shade off his game and had an 80. Pat Higgins qualified in the first round with a gross 95 and 12 handicap. Pat drives like a prince and putts like a teddy bear.

Mrs. Harry Kearne, the one lady to enter, had a fine round with 93, but finding herself the sole female, decided to withdraw, much to the gallant regret of the crowd. She played to par at four holes, out in 45, home in 48.

In Class A. W. L. Hall will play R. B. Carter; F. K. Lord will play J. O. Sword; Burl Armstrong plays W. Burns; L. Cowing plays W. A. Stillwell; W. H. Sholes plays W. W. Ralph; F. W. Pemberton draws a bye; C. H. Conk plays Pat Higgins; E. L. Ralph plays H. D. Benton.

In Class B. Charlie Mackey plays G. J. Collins; Robert Reed plays A. A. Hegerman; C. D. Hegerman plays W. W. Cott; J. L. Martz plays P. Warden; H. V. Gifford plays Hugh Blue; G. J. Bower plays Robert Mitchell.

In Class C. E. H. Dellman plays A. C. Galbraith; J. M. O'Brian plays D. F. Black; H. Stending plays G. W. Galbraith; E. B. Kidson plays E. C. Chapman; L. P. Spalding plays E. P. Sword; C. H. Backrack plays H. E. Freden; H. J. Valentine plays J. M. Lewis.

With five players left over the committee decided to be magnanimous and create another cup, for which R. E. Burbank will play A. C. Martin, and F. O. Fernold, H. E. Jones, and H. J. Thomas all draw byes.

There are cups for each class and also for the defeated eight, so that the trophy question has been decided as magnificently as could be.

THE OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP.

Today will see the first 36 holes for the open championship of Southern California at the Los Angeles Country Club. There are forty-two entries, and only five professionals had entered when the pairings were made last night. It is 72 holes medal play.

Each of the professionals will play with a scratch amateur. Here are the pairings:

Morris Phillips, Redlands, with Ernest Martin, pro., Riverside; Norman Macbeth, Los Angeles, with George Martin, pro., L.A.C.C.; Harold Lamb, Midwick, with Hutton Martin, pro., L.A.C.C.; C. W. Hunt, Midwick, with E. B. Tufts; E. H. Bagley, Los Angeles, with C. E. Dietrick, pro., Coronado; Dr. Dudley Fulton, Los Angeles, with Walter Brem, Annandale; John W. Wilson, Los Angeles, with George Snyder, Los Angeles; Sumner P. Hunt, Los Angeles, with Carl Knapp, Los Angeles; Chas. B. Hopper, Los Angeles, with H. H. Braly, Los Angeles; A. M. Goodhue, Long Beach, with A. W. Bumiller, Los Angeles; L. D. Sale, Los Angeles, with Frank Edwards, Los Angeles; A. A. French, Annandale, with J. A. Jevne, Los Angeles; E. S. Armstrong, Midwick, with Bob Black, pro., Long Beach; Harry Brintnall, Los Angeles, with L. L. Elliott, Los Angeles; Michael Hogg, Los Angeles, with Thomas McCall, Los Angeles; Robt. J. Cash, Jr., Los Angeles, with W. R. Millar, Los Angeles; S. S. Parsons, Los Angels, with Art. J. Shafer, Los Angeles; Walter Leeds, Los Angeles, with J. C. Niven, Los Angeles; Don Keller, Los Angeles, with Lambert Mead, caddie; Clyde Corieker, caddie, with John Gaines, caddie; N. W. Milligan, Los Angeles.

The Midwick baseball team got licked yesterday. The University club, which kindly substituted for the defaulting Los Angeles team, brought over such an array of talent that they won with 12 runs to 9.

They had an enthusiastic audience on the polo field, which will be twice as big next Saturday when the Los Angeles team goes over for, Midwick fondly hopes, their licking.

Anyway country club baseball has caught on and is going to be "the thing" this summer. The clubs are vying with each other to attract mysterious celebrities for the occasion, when it isn't a famous national star it's a famous national fan. Competition runs high.

Monday or Bust.

FANS CROWD TO INDIANAPOLIS

Drivers Stay in Bed and Take Life Easy.

Umbrella Merchants Reaping Rich Harvest.

Thompson and Oldfield to do Stunts Today.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

INDIANAPOLIS, May 29.—Disappointed thrill fans by the hundreds walked the streets, slept or chatted in the hotel lobbies here today and instead of defying death at every turn, race drivers worked on their mounts, which they hope will carry them through the battle when it is staged Monday. The only starting signal for the race drivers and the thousands of lovers of speed this morning was an alarm clock and many failed to report at starting time, preferring to make use of the hours by resting.

In the afternoon a few of the drivers entertained a stand crowded at fifty cents per head, by driving a few laps around the brick oval and then hiking to the garages.

RAIN CENTER

Indianapolis has been voted by all present the rain center not only of the United States but the entire world. Throughout the day the rain won a battle with the sun, and as a result the umbrella merchants for the first time were able to cut in on the speedway prices.

It has been announced officially that the speed battle of 500 miles will be staged Monday providing it is not raining when Referee Pardington arrives at the track. According to the referee, the rumor of another postponement is some more "silly chatter." With a really hot sun and many laborers it may be possible to remove the sea of mud from the infield where cars are parked, but this afternoon a submarine would have a wonderful opportunity of giving an exhibition.

THOMPSON AND BARNEY

De Loyd Thompson, an aviator, and Barney Oldfield, will cut in on the sleep of the awaiting race fans Sunday afternoon by giving exhibitions of flying and speed work at the Speedway.

Thompson and Oldfield were prevailed upon by the Speedway officials to help entertain the excitement-seeking public and they agreed to do their stunts.

While L. B. Johnson, a jitney bus operator of Pomona, Cal., was making a purchase in a drug store, a swarm of Italian honey bees took possession of his idle machine. The owner made an attempt to move the bees but was attacked and fled. John Boyd, a Pomona bee expert, was called to the rescue and after a hard fight succeeded in getting the swarm into a hive.

One truck hauled a flock of 375 sheep five miles into Charlotte, Mich., recently. The sheep were driven into crates on the truck and on six trailers. As the sheep weighed fifteen tons and each wagon 1500 pounds, the entire weight of the haul was more than twenty tons. Several hills along the road were negotiated without difficulty.

Proof positive that the motor car business in Missouri is increasing with leaps and bounds is to be found in the officials record of license registrations just issued by the State. Statistics covering February, March and April show that 2388 more cars were registered in these three months than during the entire year of 1914. The number of cars in Missouri has increased 40 per cent.

The oldest car in running order in Oklahoma is owned by Lee Hays, a banker of Haskell. This patriarch of motordom is a steamer. It was purchased in Nevada, Mo., in 1890 by Hays, who at that time was living in Nevada. He used the car in Southwest Missouri and took it with him to Oklahoma in 1906. He has worn out three other cars since he discarded the pioneer which is still in running order.

Lights generating more than 2,000,000 candlepower and illuminating a mile track as bright as day for racing at night, is the latest triumph of the illuminating engineer. A test made at the Indiana State fair grounds recently for E. A. Moross, who is promoting a series of night races on mile tracks, has demonstrated the practicability of this idea.

The completion of the 6000-foot plank section of the King Edward highway, immediately east of Laprairie, Que., at the approximate cost of $9500, marks the passing of a motorists' bugbear. This part of the highway in wet weather was a veritable morass.

BAUM HERE TO PROBE TROUBLE.

Allan T. Baum, president of the Coast League, is here for the purpose of calming the Salt Lake club.

Thursday's wrangle, in which Umpire Williams was considerably jostled, brought the chief executive south. Baum does not intend that any ball team shall get flip with his umpires.

While Baum realizes that the affair between Salt Lake and Umpire Williams has been exaggerated, he considers it sufficiently serious to warrant an investigation.

He will not suspend Hannah, as to do so would cripple the club, but he does intend to impose a heavy fine on him. Blankenship will be reinstated today.

"Blankenship's suspension was deserved," declared Baum, "and if he ever repeats the language that he addressed to Toman, he will receive even a heavier suspension. I like aggressiveness, but it must be of the right kind."

Baum declined to admit that his

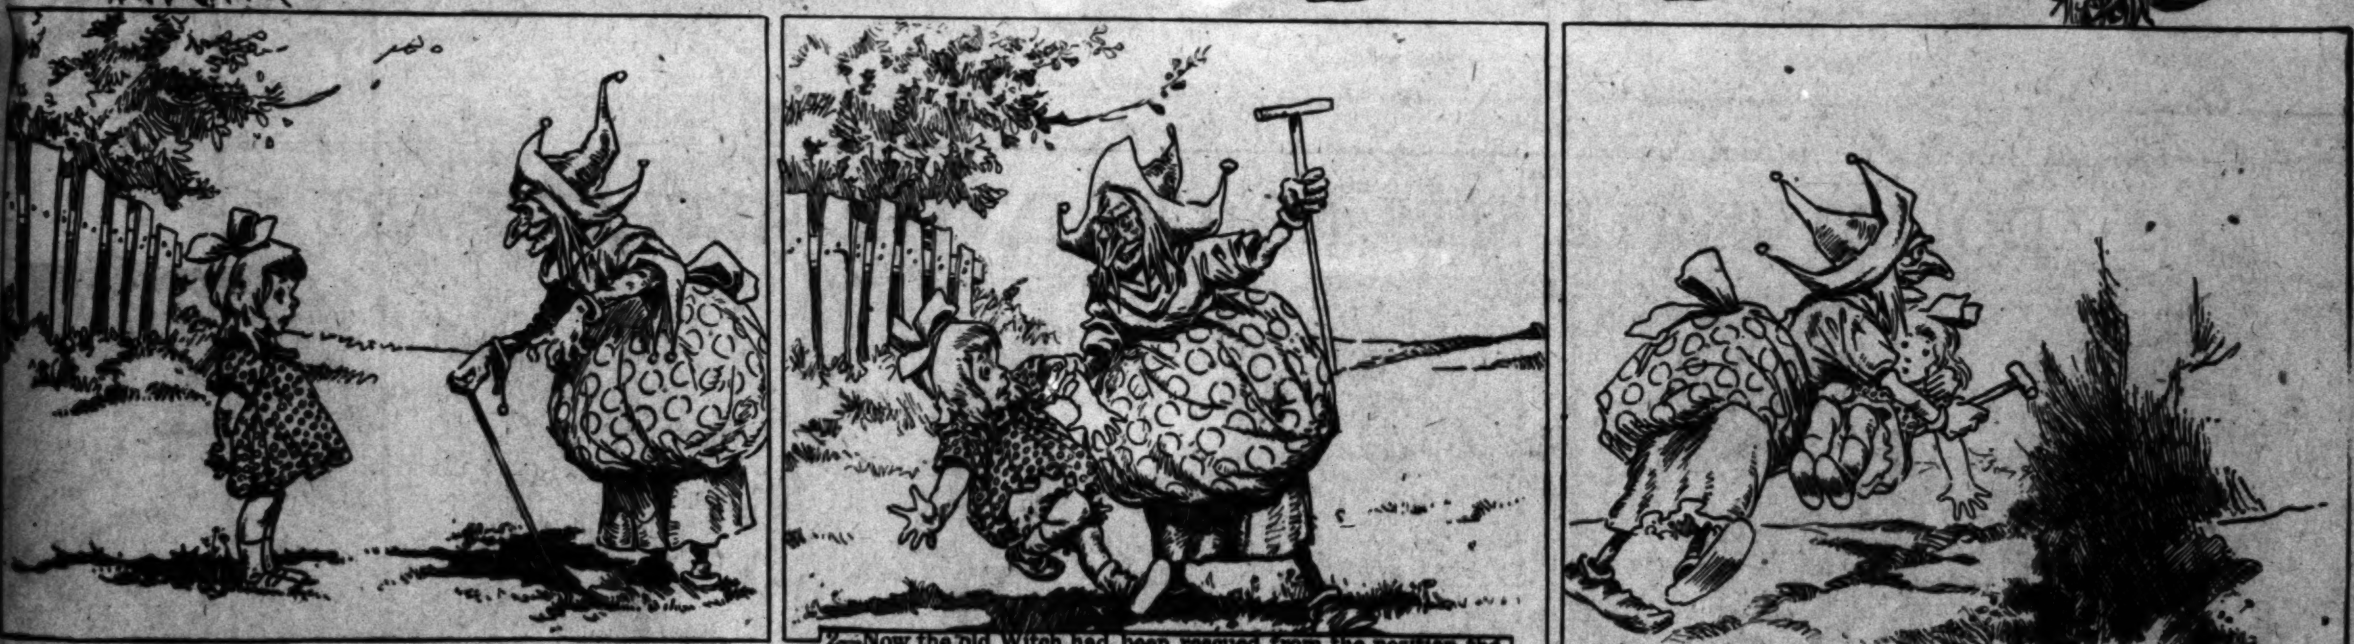
MR. TWEE DEEDLE



1—Dolly had been pretty lonesome while Dickie and Mr. Twee Deedle had been away on so many adventures, so she walked across the field to see if she could see them returning, but instead she came upon the old Tree Witch.

2—Now the old Witch had been rescued from the position the boys had left her in and was hunting for Dickie and Twee Deedle, so when she saw Dolly she knew right away that she was a sister of Dickie, so she grabbed Dolly roughly by the arm.

3—Then the Witch said a magic word and, jumping upon her cane, she flew with Dolly into the air and across the fields.

4—Now Dickie and Mr. Twee Deedle had just left the house of the Horsemen and were taking a short cut home, when they saw the Witch with Dolly fly overhead.

5—So Mr. Twee Deedle and Dickie flew to the cave in the side of the hill, and flew so fast that they were there waiting for the Witch when she came up with Dolly. Mr. Twee Deedle had cautioned Dickie not to make a sound and had said a great number of magic words before the Witch came.

6—So when the Witch took three steps toward the door, a magic rope that Mr. Twee Deedle had made invisible caught her around the ankle and jerked her up into the tree so quickly she did not know what had happened. And while the old Witch was hanging and kicking at the end of the rope our three little friends ran home as fast as they could.

COMMON SENSE in the HOME
EDITED by MARION HARLAND

THE VOICE WITH THE SMILE WINS.

"THE voice with the smile wins." This sentence met my eyes the other day as I stopped to buy my ticket at a station and set me to thinking. By one of those odd coincidences which occur now and then a series of little instances followed the incident and fixed it in my mind.

The first was a chat with a young girl friend of whom a lad had spoken to me as "one of the nicest girls I ever knew—a perfect charmer!" He had met her at a dance.

"What did you do to make such a delightful impression on that young fellow?" I asked her, with some curiosity. "He is not given to rhapsodizing over girls, but you evidently won his heart."

She laughed. "I don't think I did anything except smile at him," she said. "He was sitting across the room from me between the dances and several times when I glanced in that direction I caught his eye and I smiled at him and he smiled back again at me. He's a nice boy!"

A few days later I was sitting in a club library with another friend when some one entered to use the telephone. As she approached the instrument she glanced towards us and bowed and smiled. I knew she was a fellow member of the club, although I had never met her. Her action, simple as it was, gave me a pleasant glow of feeling, a sensation of her friendliness and good will, although no word was spoken. It was another illustration that "the smile wins."

Do any of us know how much we have it in our power to cheer or to darken the lives of those with whom we are associated, or of those whom we meet casually, by our aspect and demeanor? Think it over for a few minutes.

To begin with the first social event of the day, the breakfast table. Consider for a moment the effect it has upon you when you enter the dining room if you are greeted with a smile and a cheerful word or if you are met by glum looks and a heavy silence.

I do not wish to enter here upon the question as to whether or not continuous conversation shall be conducted at the breakfast table. We have discussed that before in the Corner and you probably all know my opinion in the matter. I see no reason why persons of ordinary health and with no more than the average share of trials and troubles should not present pleasant countenances and indulge in a courteous interchange of remarks at the first meal of the day. Even if they don't feel like it, the discipline of denying their own inclinations for the sake of increasing the comfort of others is good for their souls. But apart from the question of talk, there seems to me no valid cause why the members of the family should not at least summon a smile with which to meet those they presumably love best, even at breakfast time.

One woman I know had a son who had the habit of arising in the morning with what the youth of today term a 'grouch.' His mother talked to him about it seriously, and in the effort to assume a cheeriness that he did not possess the boy hit upon a plan of his own. He selected a good sized piece of cardboard and inscribed on it in large letters the words, "Smile, darn you.."

This placard and inscription he hung in a prominent position at the foot of his bed where his eyes would rest upon it the first thing when he opened them in the morning and his awakening powers would be summoned to the effort of looking cheerful. For months the card hung there until the sight of it and the corresponding attempt at conquest of the "grouch" had brought about satisfactory results.

When the mother told me of the occurrence I wished with all my heart I could have a number of such placards printed and distribute them in quarters where I know they are needed. I pass the idea on for the benefit of those who think the counsel the young man addressed to himself may be of value to themselves or to others.

The same habit of cheeriness which works well at the breakfast table may be advantageously applied throughout the rest of the day. I take it for granted that you have the custom of speaking pleasantly to your employés and to your tradespeople as well as to those whom you consider personal friends. And yet I don't know why I should take it for granted when I see so many instances of just the other sort of thing among those with whom I am brought into chance contact.

One man I know, for example, calls to see a relative frequently, on an average of once a week throughout the year, never yet addressed a kindly word of greeting to the maid who opens the door to him and has been in the family employ for many months. It would cost him nothing to say "Good evening" to her when she admits him and it might mean a little brightening of toil to her.

Again, how often do we hear the request for tickets at an office window or the inquiry for goods of any sort in a shop put in a courteous and cheerful manner? Is it not rather the exception than the rule? Do we not usually expect and get a curt phrase rather than a kindly one, and are we ourselves guiltless of the same sort of behavior?

More than this, how much do we encourage courtesy and consideration by commendation? We are ready enough to blame rudeness; are we as prompt to accord praise for the reverse?

The other day I was treated with especial attention by a young woman behind the counter from whom I was making a purchase. It was rather late in the day, there was a rush of customers, but in spite of the weariness that must have been hers after a long struggle with a lot of more or less unreasonable women my clerk was cheerful and civil. As I left her I stopped one of the aisle men.

"I wish to call your attention to the blonde young woman at the handkerchief counter," I began.

His face instantly assumed the expression of one who awaits a complaint. As I spoke of her merits his countenance cleared.

"Thank you, madam," he said. "We receive so much fault finding that it is refreshing once in a while when some one takes the pains to inform us of something pleasant about one of our employés."

I might have added, but did not, that in many cases the employés evidently considered their sole business was to sell goods which were demanded by customers, and not to make the process an agreeable one to the purchasers. The smile does not always accompany the voice, by any means.

Cheerfulness of expression does a great deal to brighten the world in general for those about one. If you have never done it before, make a study of the faces of those seated opposite you in any public conveyance the next time you happen to be on one.

Perhaps the first thing which will impress you may be the exceeding lack of attractiveness in many of your fellow passengers. This is a distressing fact. Few persons are really good looking—so few that when you see an actually pretty girl or a handsome woman it comes like a refreshing breath of air. But while you may not expect beauty of features in every one, there is no reason why there should not be more or less charm of expression. Yet this is usually as conspicuous by its absence as the personal pulchritude.

Look at the mouths of the women, for instance. Notice how nearly all turn down at the corners, with a melancholy droop, as though the thoughts of the owners were all sad or annoying. How seldom you see lips with an upward curve or with lines which bespeak frequent smiles and bright looks! Granted that there is much sorrow in the [illegible] there must also be admitted [illegible] happiness to produce an [illegible] merry mouth. Why do we see [illegible] dom? And do we make the effort [illegible] selves to cultivate such an [illegible] for the sake of others?

As we get on in age we must take for granted that lines and wrinkles [illegible] come. That is a matter beyond control, and the faces which display [illegible] records do not always indicate that [illegible] possessors have thought of [illegible] But these same records may be [illegible] tiful and cheerful thoughts that [illegible] their traces and enable [illegible] "continual comfort in a face." [illegible] the different effect produced upon [illegible] sitting opposite the owner of such [illegible] tenance and that gained by [illegible] gloomy, frowning man or woman [illegible] vis-à-vis.

"The voice with the smile" [illegible] particularly in the home. I [illegible] that some of us, when tired or [illegible] have a tendency to slip into a [illegible] assume a grumbling tone.

"What is the matter with [illegible] voice? It gets on my nerves [illegible]" some one said to me of a certain [illegible] woman we know.

"She always sounds querulous," [illegible] tributed some one else, and [illegible] always feel as if she were going [illegible] me that all the cream had turned [illegible]

And yet the woman [illegible] really a kindly soul, who [illegible] tease about her beauty. Unfortunately she was neither born with the [illegible] looking on the dark side of things [illegible] cultivated the habit, and it had [illegible] itself upon her voice—and, I [illegible] upon her countenance. [illegible] bevy of critics—they [illegible] therefore inclined to [illegible]

"Even when she isn't [illegible] ways looks as though something disagreeable had happened or as though there were a bad smell in the neighborhood."

It was uncharitable, of course, [illegible] the rest of the world [illegible] judged by appearances and [illegible] tainly confirmed all they [illegible] duced the effect of [illegible] querulousness, discontent. "The voice with the smile" would [illegible] way.

Let me give a little [illegible] which fits in well [illegible] thought into better [illegible]

"What was the [illegible] power? What had [illegible] nothing; but radiant [illegible] good humor, the [illegible] every one felt and [illegible] that she had got [illegible] to think of others [illegible] of her heavenly [illegible]

MARION HARLAND'S HELPING HAND.

Demand Exceeds Supply.

"WILL you please give me the address of the woman who has silk pieces to give away? She signed herself Mrs. H. I will more than appreciate your kindness and will do what I can in return. G. J. T."

I am sorry to say that the silk pieces have already been bestowed in other quarters. So many requests have come for them that we could have used far more than Mrs. H. possessed. Is there not some one else in the Corner who can take up this inquiry and supply the need of this correspondent?

All Given Away.

"I note in the Corner the offer of Marie B., which is just what I have been looking for. I dearly love crochet work and if you will give me the correspondent's full name and address I will write to her and would be delighted to receive at least part of the material she has to offer. I have two little children and for a year I disposed of my work canvassing, but have no one now with whom to leave my children and the woman who wrote offered to give hints as to how to dispose of the work. If housewives who do their own work and in haste have to set a pot directly on the flame will grease the bottom and sides of the vessel they will find the soot can be easily wiped off with old paper or cloth. E. O. D."

Again I have to reply that the articles offered have all been given away. If any one can help this correspondent, either by sending such crochet patterns and materials as she wishes or by informing her how to dispose of her work when completed, I will gladly give her address to such Cornerites. We are grateful for the suggestion she offers as to the pots and saucepans which must be set directly over the flame.

Recipe for Mock Turkey.

"I see my contribution of an inexpensive fruit cake in the Corner and as you suggest, two teaspoons of soda in the cake is correct instead of two tablespoons as I mistakenly wrote it. Also the orange peel is to be minced, as you also state. The nuts must likewise be broken into small pieces and these and the fruit dredged in flour. I would like also to pass on another help which I received recently and found fine, it is called mock turkey. Make a dressing of one pint of mashed potato and one pint of soaked bread and one small onion minced. Season with poultry dressing; pepper and salt to taste. Place a layer of the dressing in a small meat pan, or a loaf bread pan would do; put on it a layer of ground meat of any kind. I used hamburger steak meat and sausage meat mixed. Moisten with gravy or hot water; arrange another layer of dressing on top of this and put little bits of butter here and there. Bake for about twenty minutes in a moderate oven. If this is made with cooked meat twenty minutes will be enough, but when I used the raw chopped meat I cooked for a longer time, using my judgment. The meat is nice sliced cold or sliced and browned in the frying pan. M. M. D."

I am glad that the correction and suggestions I made as to mixing the fruit cake are correct and I am grateful for the suggestion as to how mock turkey is to be made. I take it for granted that it is served first as a roast before the stage when it is sliced and served cold or fried.

Putting Up Fruit.

"Now that it is getting warm I am thinking about putting up fruit and would like to collect some good recipes.

"Could you or any other of the Helping Hand supply me with trustworthy recipes for canning peaches and making sweet peach pickle, as well as sweet cucumber pickle? I find when my peaches are over a year old they are not so good. Do you find this to be the case? As a matter of course I always use the glass jars.

"MRS. J. W. T."

Every year there are talks about pickling, canning, preserving, etc., and something of this kind will appear in due season. In the meantime I shall be happy to receive and print any good recipes for the articles asked for. Canned fruit does not keep well for more than a year, and that left over from the season before is likely to deteriorate in color and in taste.

Walnut Torte Cake.

"Some time ago there appeared in the Corner a recipe for walnut torte cake. I cut it out and by mistake it was lost. Will you kindly reprint it soon?

"MRS. E. G. B."

Another argument in favor of keeping recipes in scrapbooks or mounting them on cards and arranging them in a filing box. I regret to say that I have not the recipe which is asked. Can some one of our correspondents supply it?

Request Met Generous Response.

"Let me thank you for passing on my address to some kind persons who have responded generously to my request for books for my children. Two of the books which came were especially appreciated and then loaned and will probably pass through several other hands and be read and reread. If my mention and request have been so liberally answered what must be the good and the joy the Corner is spreading all the time to those who are more deserving than we or whose needs are more urgent! Thank the Cornerites also for their inclosures of cards and their letters with offers of reading matter. To some of these I will write myself. Your helpful department is most interesting. I have tried several of the recipes and found them excellent. As to the sunshine and cheer spread by the corner, there is no means of measuring. Let me thank you again for the real pleasure you have given me. . . MRS. E. A. T."

This letter gives me genuine happiness to print as an appreciation and an indication of the good constantly wrought by our faithful Cornerites. Never was there a finer and more helpful band of workers than ours!

Makes Vinegar at Home.

"Here is a recipe for home made vinegar which I use all the time and keep many of my neighbors supplied with: In emptying sirup pitchers, fruit jars, jelly glasses, and in fact anything containing sweetmeats, I rinse the jar or vessel out with a little water and put the rinsings in an earthen jar, which I cover with a clean cloth to keep out the dust but not to exclude the air. I add to it any time I have fruit juices of any kind. I cook apple and tomato parings, strain when cool, and add to the jar. In a short time the 'mother' will begin to form and the vinegar germ is at work soon. The vinegar will be surprisingly sour, is better than vinegar made from acid, and does not cost one cent. Now for a request. I have a sick husband and I am helping make our living by dressmaking. I am in need of an air cushion because of a trouble from which I suffer and would be much obliged if I could receive the one offered by Mrs. L. B. G. MRS. B. B. D."

We are grateful for this suggestion for the vinegar making and I hope some one may have the air cushion needed. Unfortunately that offered has been given away.

Wants House Plants.

"Do you suppose some Cornerite would like to send some hardy house plants in return for some plain sewing? Two successive crop failures and a mortgage on a homestead make it out of the question to buy flowers. I would like geraniums, ferns, wandering Jew, trailing myrtle, asparagus plumosa, or sprengeria, or any other hardy plants or seeds or bulbs of plants, and would give full value in plain sewing, which would best be something light to go through the mail, such as baby dresses. In sending plants or cuttings by mail an excellent way is to bind thick slices of raw potato about the root end. The roots will not wilt for several days if so packed. For plants requiring much moisture bury beside the roots a tin can having holes punched in the sides just above the bottom. Keep this can filled with water and covered. R. A."

While there may not be Cornerites who wish plain sewing in return for plants, I am sure there may be many who are making their gardens now and who have abundant cuttings, seeds, etc., to give away. They might be glad to do this for the sake of another flower lover as well as in return for the bits of gardening lore she offers. Any one who really cares for a garden will appreciate what a deprivation it must be to be forced to forego one from lack of ability to buy plants. I have her address on file and will gladly send it to any one who wishes to help supply the empty garden plot.

Embroidery to Exchange.

"I would like to exchange an embroidered centerpiece for a Bible, slightly used. I would pay postage. I would also like to do Hardanger embroidery on half shares. MRS. C. F. F."

I suppose the desire to do the embroidery on half shares means that one person will supply the material and the other do the work. I am not altogether positive that I am correct in this surmise, but I will be glad to give the address of this correspondent to any one who has a Bible to give in return for the embroidery or desires to correspond relative to the shared work.

Wheeled Chair Would Help.

"My husband, who is in the '60s, has been sick for more than a year with anemia. I have to work for our living at great inconvenience since he is too sick for me to leave him alone, so I have the washing I am able to do for the neighbors brought to me in order that I can do it at home, where I can be near him. What I feel the need of most is a wheeled chair for him to sit in so that he could get about by himself, and so I could push him about with less difficulty than now. He is able at times to sit up in a rocker and if any Corner reader has a wheeled chair that is no longer in use it would certainly be a great blessing to us.

"MRS. M. J. M."

You see the plucky wife makes no complaint that the care and the support of the sick man as well as his nursing should come upon her. All she asks for is the chair in which the sick man can be more comfortable and which will enable her to help him from place to place with less difficulty. I will gladly give her address to any one who can aid her by the gift or the loan of the chair she desires.

Has Use for Remnants.

"Your talk on different methods of cooking eggs came just in time for me, as they are plentiful here, and I did not know they could be prepared in such appetizing ways. I will send cuttings of cape jasmine and evergreens to any one who wants them. I have some moleskins I will give. They make softer powder puffs than the chamois skin. I would appreciate any short lengths of remnants of goods that I could make into dresses for the little ones. I also wish an embroidery design to work around the bottom of a baby dress. I [illegible] in any way I could. [illegible]

FOR THE INDUSTRIOUS NEEDLEWOMAN

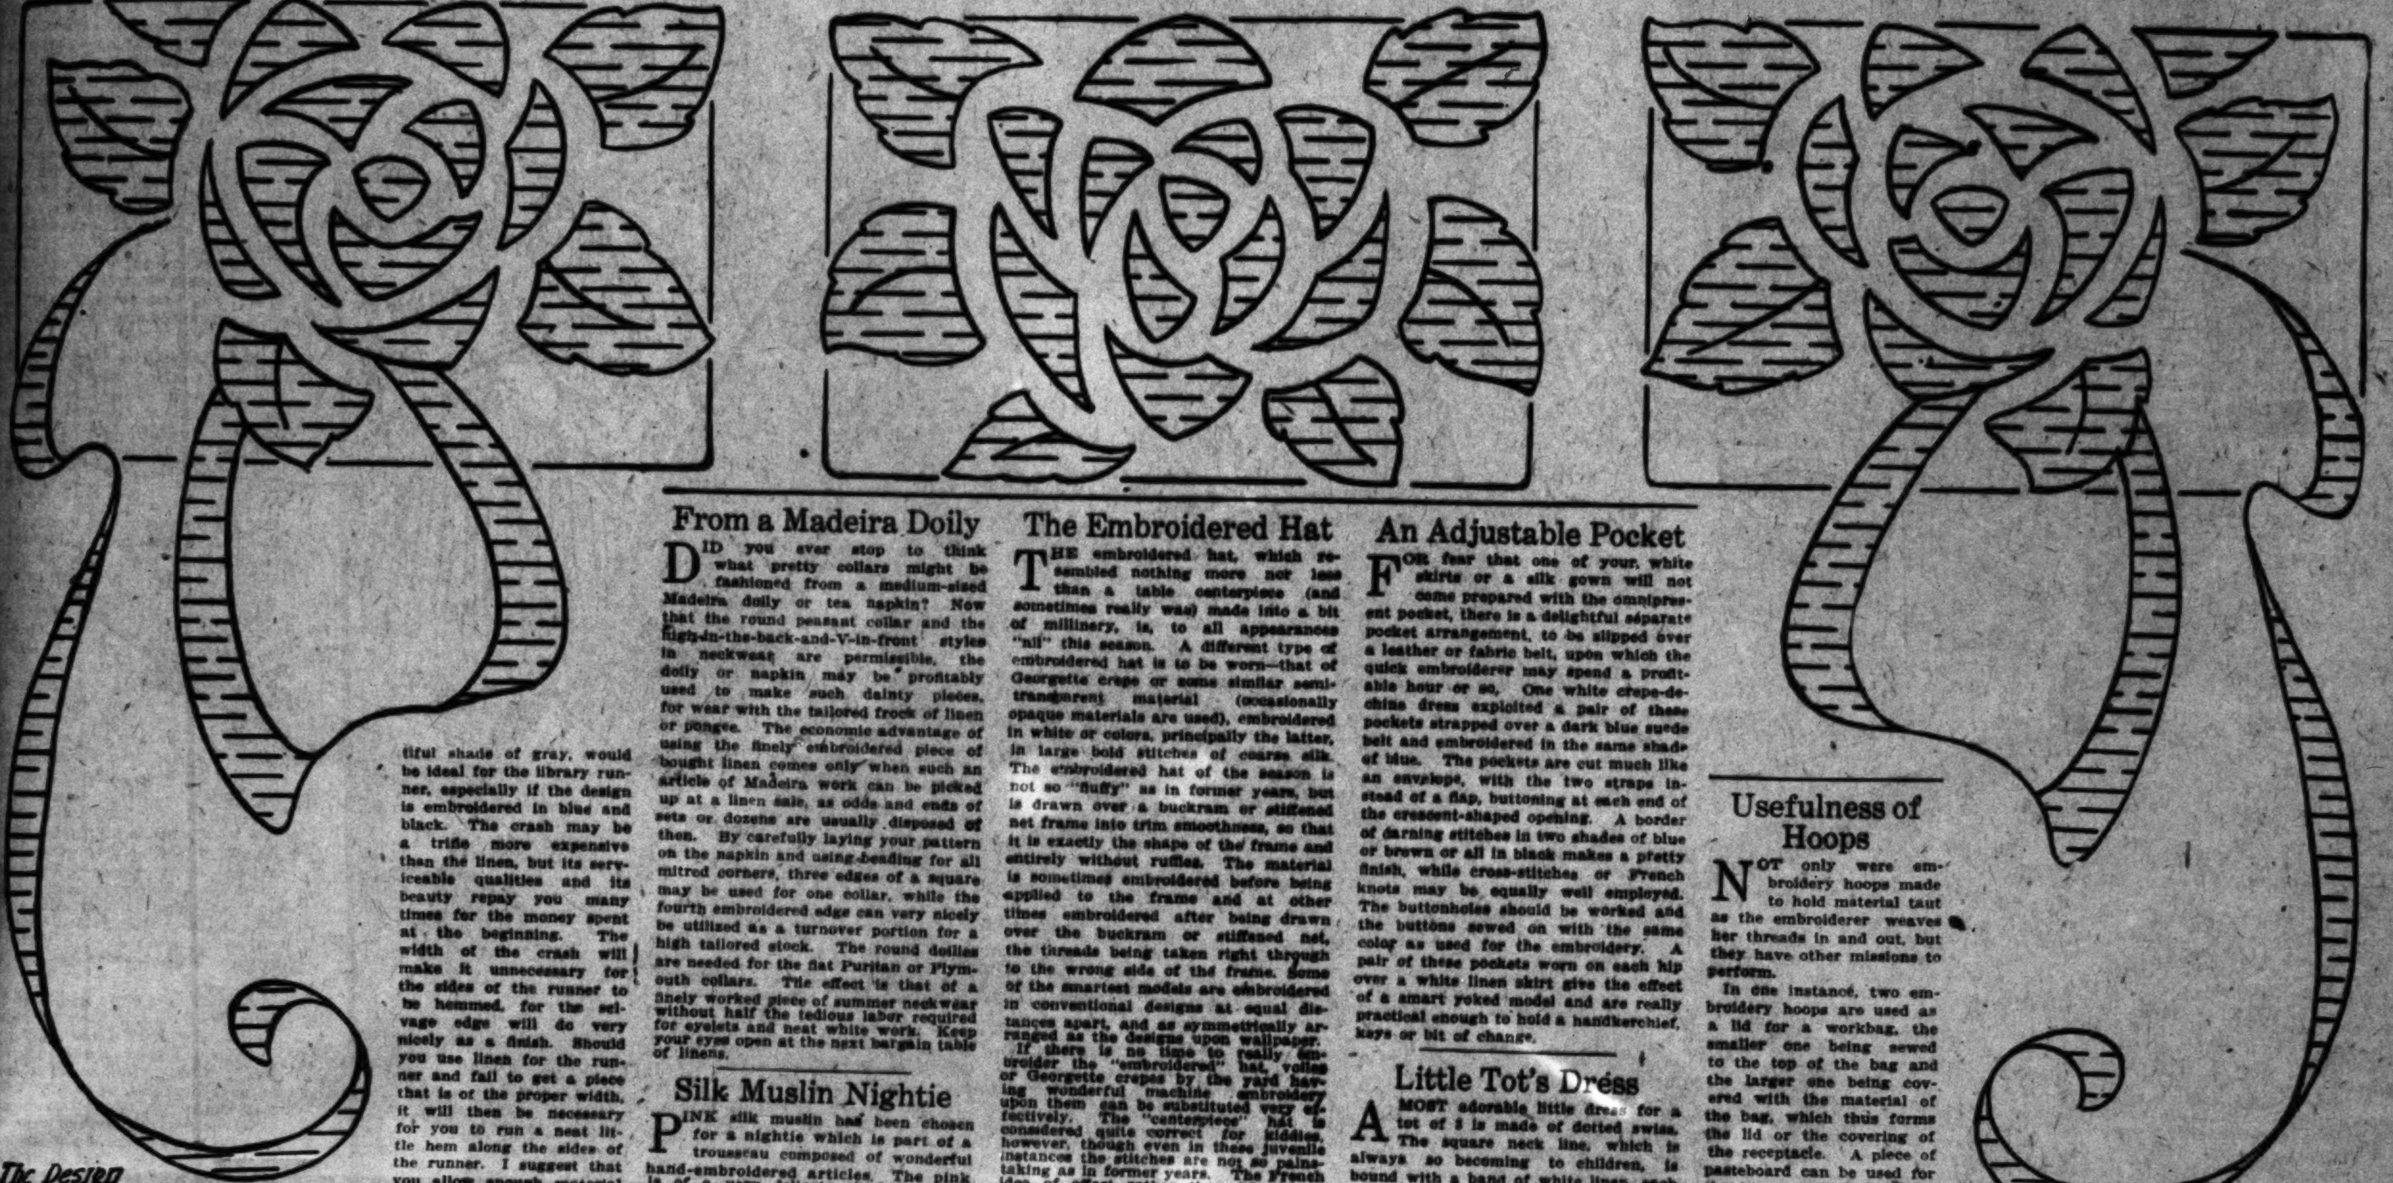
CONVENTIONAL ROSES for TABLE RUNNER

DESIGNED BY OLIVE G. HAUFLER.



The Design

NE of the most attractive conventional rose designs that I have ever had the pleasure of offering is before you, and it is to grace a table runner. The ting part about the design is that s for no padding, and the stitches ry to complete the work are so e and easy that it will take but time to embroider the design.

section which goes to make up e and each leaf should be out-. The veins of each leaf, the rib- loop and flowing ends are also ble for outline stitches. The rec-ar blocks which frame the roses to be outlined. The straight lines ch section should be covered with -and-short stitches.

e design is quite suitable for a ry table runner, for the buffet or the serving table in the dining . Of course, the purpose for which intend to use the runner will de-ine the material on which to stamp design.

uld you decide to use it for the y, then select tan or green linen. n crash, which comes in a beautiful shade of gray, would be ideal for the library runner, especially if the design is embroidered in blue and black. The crash may be a trifle more expensive than the linen, but its serviceable qualities and its beauty repay you many times for the money spent at the beginning. The width of the crash will make it unnecessary for the sides of the runner to be hemmed, for the selvage edge will do very nicely as a finish. Should you use linen for the runner and fail to get a piece that is of the proper width, it will then be necessary for you to run a neat little hem along the sides of the runner. I suggest that you allow enough material to make a two-inch hem at the ends of the runner. If you will take the time to hemstitch the hems, the whole effect will be much handsomer.

If you are going to make the runner for the dining room, select white linen on which to trace the design. Embroider the pattern in blue, green, yellow, or whatever color predominates in the color scheme of your dining room. Even in such a case a touch of black is practical. It adds so much to the finished work.

The central block of the design is quite suitable for stenciling, and the two end blocks might be treated in the same manner if a "bridge" is cut where the loop of ribbon joins the section of petals, and the single lines of flowing ends of ribbon are omitted, as these could not be cut from the stencil board. They might be painted in afterward if desired. The line of the rectangular frames can also be painted after the rest of the work is done.

After you have applied the design to a table runner, set to work and make a cushion to match and thus let your davenport and table feel that they have a link which binds them together.

rking the Household Linen

TTY monograms and artistic letters appeal to all good housewives, but the proper ing and placing of letters on hold linens is apt to prove puz- to the uninitiated. It is an easy to trace the amateur hand in and monograms on table and ens, and for that reason the is wise who follows the cut-ed rules of the professional oiderer. Sheets should be stamp-ove the hem directly in the cen-d so that the initial or mono-may be read from the foot of bed when the sheet is turned back the counterpane. The letters be three inches in height, ugh they may be larger if one so es, five-inch lettering often ap-ing to great advantage. The ings of pillow slips should be in center of one end, directly above hem. If the three-inch letter is on the sheet, a two-inch letter ld appear on the pillow slip. A smart gothic monogram seen on vy linen sheet is eight inches re, the letters worked into the re diamond fashion; this but s that an artist may disregard rules for lettering sizes which cautious housewife must follow. le linen admits of much decora- lettering. Tablecloths are stamp- in one corner only, or in diagonal rs, the letters being from two three inches in height and placed that they may be read by those sit-g around the table. The mono-should fall about six inches in the edge of the table at the er. Napkins are marked with let- from one to one and three-quar- inches and placed directly in the . Both tablecloth and napkins ld have the letters well padded that they will stand out in the effective manner.

A word about the laundering of in-s and monograms may not be out place. Embroidered lettering ld never be rubbed; a small ubbing brush is much more ef-tive and will not stretch or wear the cotton. When ironing the ogram or initial it should be ed over several thicknesses of ish toweling and pressed dry er than ironed back and forth.

Laundering Embroidered Linens

MANY women complain that their embroidered linens do not wear well. These women, however, confess, after they have been questioned, that they do not take the proper care of their embroidered articles.

In the first place, it is a mistake to put embroidered pieces in with the regular wash. They should be washed by themselves in an earthen bowl, to avoid the possibility of rust or other stain. Fairly hot water and a pure soap should be used and the material should be washed quickly.

The soiled portions of the linen should be rubbed gently between the hands and not rubbed on a board. After rinsing the articles in clean water, lay each piece flat between two dry towels or thick linen cloths. Roll the piece up in these, so that no part of the embroidery can touch any other part of the same linen. Leave for ten or fifteen minutes, then lay the piece, face down, upon a well-padded ironing board, spread a clean white cloth over the embroidery and iron quickly and lightly with a hot iron, being careful not to press too heavily upon the embroidered portions. This precaution should be heeded particularly when ironing a piece of linen embroidered in silk, as a hot iron placed over the wet silk will produce steam, and the steam will take the life from the silk.

Embroidered Blouse

THE woman in mourning who desires to have a touch of black on an otherwise white blouse can carry out the following idea: Down the front of the blouse, along the line of fastening, a double row of outlining can be worked in black and white. Outline stitches, following the shape of the buttons used to fasten the blouse, will give another opportunity to introduce the touch of black. For instance, if oval buttons are used, an oval frame of outlining would be placed around them; around diamond-shaped buttons would be a diamond-shaped frame, and so on. Therefore, the design of the button would also determine the nature of the design to be worked on the collar and cuffs of the blouse.

From a Madeira Doily

DID you ever stop to think what pretty collars might be fashioned from a medium-sized Madeira doily or tea napkin? Now that the round peasant collar and the high-in-the-back-and-V-in-front styles in neckwear are permissible, the doily or napkin may be profitably used to make such dainty pieces, for wear with the tailored frock of linen or pongee. The economic advantage of using the finely embroidered piece of bought linen comes only when such an article of Madeira work can be picked up at a linen sale, as odds and ends of sets or dozens are usually disposed of then. By carefully laying your pattern on the napkin and using beading for all mitred corners, three edges of a square may be used for one collar, while the fourth embroidered edge can very nicely be utilized as a turnover portion for a high tailored stock. The round doilies are needed for the flat Puritan or Plymouth collars. The effect is that of a finely worked piece of summer neckwear without half the tedious labor required for eyelets and neat white work. Keep your eyes open at the next bargain table of linens.

Silk Muslin Nightie

PINK silk muslin has been chosen for a nightie which is part of a trousseau composed of wonderful hand-embroidered articles. The pink is of a very delicate shade, so that it is sure to appeal to the girl who loves daintiness. The V-shaped neck of the nightie is finished with buttonholed scallops and is slashed down the front for several inches. Each side of the slashed material is provided with buttonholed slots and through the slots narrow black velvet ribbon is run. Wider black velvet ribbon is run through slots placed higher in the back than the front. A design is embroidered on the front of the gown and on each sleeve in pink and blue.

The Embroidered Hat

THE embroidered hat, which resembled nothing more nor less than a table centerpiece (and sometimes really was) made into a bit of millinery, is, to all appearances "nil" this season. A different type of embroidered hat is to be worn—that of Georgette crepe or some similar semi-transparent material (occasionally opaque materials are used), embroidered in white or colors, principally the latter, in large bold stitches of coarse silk. The embroidered hat of the season is not so "fluffy" as in former years, but is drawn over a buckram or stiffened net frame into trim smoothness, so that it is exactly the shape of the frame and entirely without ruffles. The material is sometimes embroidered before being applied to the frame and at other times embroidered after being drawn over the buckram or stiffened net, the threads being taken right through to the wrong side of the frame. Some of the smartest models are embroidered in conventional designs at equal distances apart, and as symmetrically arranged as the designs upon wallpaper.

If there is no time to really embroider the "embroidered" hat, voiles or Georgette crepes by the yard having wonderful machine embroidery upon them can be substituted very effectively. The "centerpiece" hat is considered quite correct for kiddies, however, though even in these juvenile instances the stitches are not so painstaking as in former years. The French idea of effect rather than "finishing" and detail seems to have penetrated American fashions for a permanent stay.

How to Transfer

PLACE a sheet of impression carbon paper between your fabric and the newspaper design, the latter on top. With a sharp pencil or a glass-pointed pen go over the outline. The design will be transferred to the material.

An Adjustable Pocket

FOR fear that one of your white skirts or a silk gown will not come prepared with the omnipresent pocket, there is a delightful separate pocket arrangement, to be slipped over a leather or fabric belt, upon which the quick embroiderer may spend a profitable hour or so. One white crepe-de-chine dress exploited a pair of these pockets strapped over a dark blue suede belt and embroidered in the same shade of blue. The pockets are cut much like an envelope, with the two straps instead of a flap, buttoning at each end of the crescent-shaped opening. A border of darning stitches in two shades of blue or brown or all in black makes a pretty finish, while cross-stitches or French knots may be equally well employed. The buttonholes should be worked and the buttons sewed on with the same color as used for the embroidery. A pair of these pockets worn on each hip over a white linen skirt give the effect of a smart yoked model and are really practical enough to hold a handkerchief, keys or bit of change.

Little Tot's Dress

A MOST adorable little dress for a tot of 3 is made of dotted swiss. The square neck line, which is always so becoming to children, is bound with a band of white linen, each side of which is featherstitched. At each corner of the neck line is a cluster of pink French knots simulating buds, and scattered around these are clusters of green French knots representing the leaves. Several rows of shirring form the fullness at the front, just below the linen band, and shirring also holds the fullness in at the waist line. Over the shirred belt the pink and green French knots appear. Three one-inch tucks are run around the bottom of the dress. The short, puffed sleeves are finished with a ruffle of the material, and this is edged with narrow embroidery.

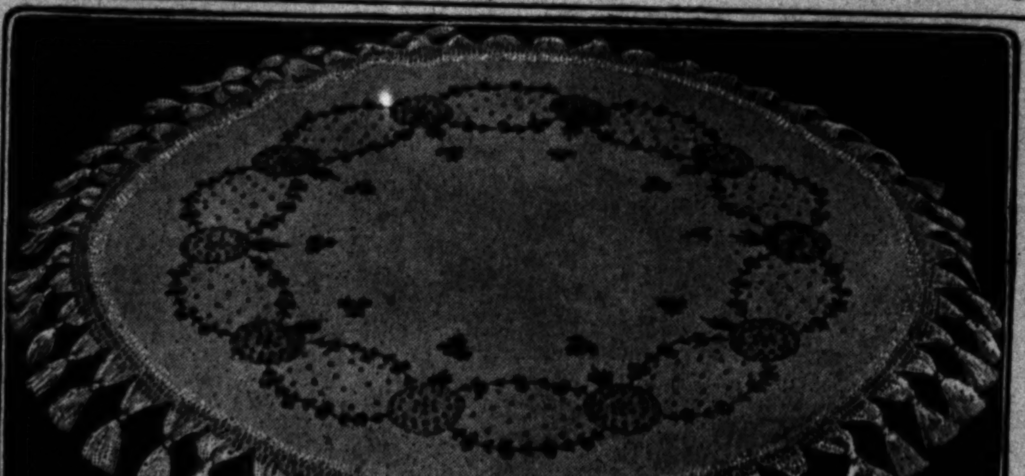
Usefulness of Hoops

NOT only were embroidery hoops made to hold material taut as the embroiderer weaves her threads in and out, but they have other missions to perform.

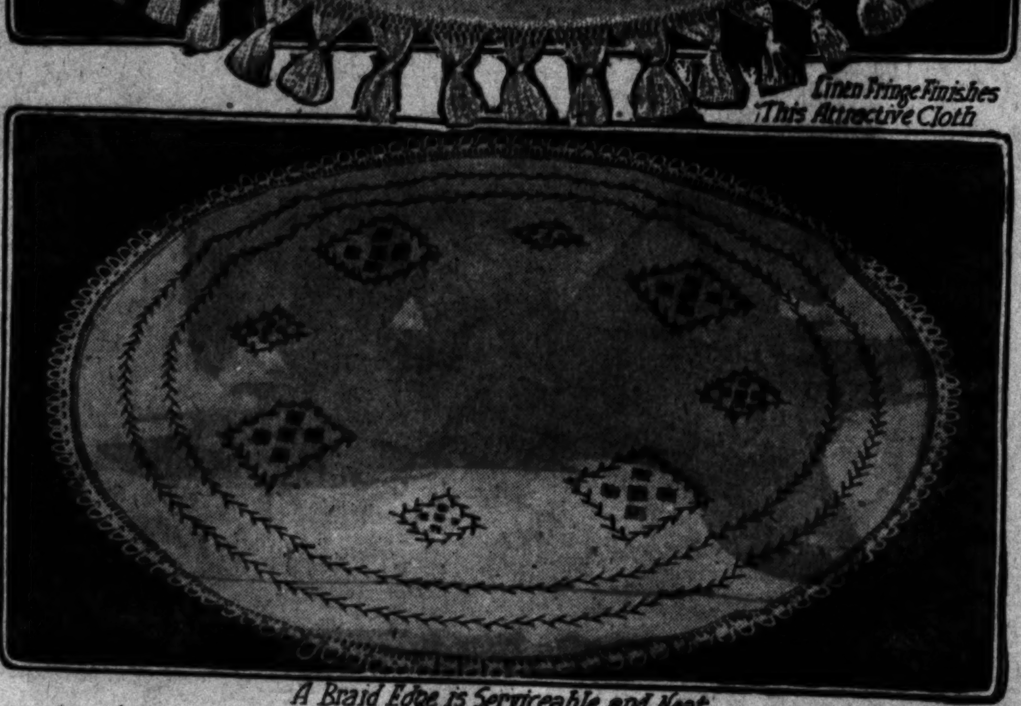
In one instance, two embroidery hoops are used as a lid for a workbag, the smaller one being sewed to the top of the bag and the larger one being covered with the material of the bag, which thus forms the lid or the covering of the receptacle. A piece of pasteboard can be used for the bottom of the bag, or one of the sweet-grass baskets will prove useful and ornamental for such a purpose.

Frequently, embroidery hoops form the handles of workbags, darning or handkerchief bags. When they play such a role they are bound with ribbon and for a space of three inches are sewed beneath the turned-over top of the bag. A very summery looking bag, having handles of hoops, is made of dotted swiss over a pink lining.

QUICKLY MADE SUMMER COVERS



Linen Fringe Finishes This Attractive Cloth



A Braid Edge is Serviceable and Neat.

IT IS not necessary to warn the good housekeeper to store away her heavy winter hangings and covers during the summer months and to place in their stead linen that may be put into the tub whenever expedient. But all good housekeepers do not know what things of beauty can be evolved at very little expense and time from these linen covers, if a small amount of handwork is added to them. Simple stitches and cheerful color schemes predominate, though all-white work is not to be despised.

The usual scalloped centerpiece is sometimes appalling to the inexperienced or slow needleworker, who sighs at the thought of the tedious buttonholing and longs to sail right into the design proper, with its interesting color combinations and stitches. For this reason, and also for practicality's sake, the new summer covers are being finished in many delightful and machine-made ways, such as braid, fringe and heavy lace. The braid-edged cover illustrated is of natural-colored linen in a rather heavy weave and carries out a blue color scheme both in the working and the edge. The stitches in this design are almost kindergarten work, the featherstitch effect being gained by long, single stitches placed at angles, and the "flowers" in the outlined squares by a simple punchwork method of taking each stitch from one central hole. The featherstitching is in a dark blue, while the punched work is done in a lighter delft shade. Heavy mercerized cotton is used for this work. The braid that finishes this quickly made cloth is linen, with a bit of blue worked in at the selvage edge. It is easily stretched and applied to the rounded edge of the cloth, but in sewing by machine see that it is carefully basted, with plenty of fullness to allow the braid to lie smooth on a flat surface. Nothing is more annoying than a puckered edge. It is advisable to shrink both linen and braid before applying one to the other. This same cover worked out in two tones of green, in brown and tan or black and white would be equally charming and fitting for any cottage color scheme.

The second cover is also of linen, and while more elaborate in appearance, is scarcely more difficult than the first. The floral nosegays are merely a mass of French knots in two tones of pink, while the vines and scattered flowers may be worked with knots of blue. Green stems and leaves of lazy-daisy stitches give character to the design, while the dots between the nosegays may be worked in black, to introduce that color so essential in the newer pieces of embroidery work. Pansy colorings of lavenders, browns and yellows could very well be used on this cover for use with gay wicker furnishings. A fringe of linen thread forms a most effective finish and, again, does away with the objectionable scalloping or buttonholing. Fringe requires careful laundering, for it should be shaken while wet until the threads are disentangled and carefully pulled into shape with the hands when entirely dry. Another pretty way of finishing the linen covers, and one that may be utilized for dressing-table scarfs and table runners, is that of sewing within an inch of the edge a bright-colored cotton braid. This is most pliable, and when carefully basted may be run on by machine. The edge of the linen is then neatly hemmed by hand and a narrow picot edge is crocheted in the same color as that of the braid. This picot crochet may be utilized as a finish without the braid for smaller linen articles.

Don't be afraid of putting a little handwork into the summer coverings; there are lots of labor-saving devices, even in the realm of needlework.

Baby's Light-Weight Quilt

BABY needs a quilt even in the midst of summer. She doesn't, of course, need so heavy a one for the warm months as when Jack Frost is laying for a nip of her toes, but need a quilt she does at all times. The summer quilt is not more than from a half to a whole inch thick, although a layer of lamb's wool makes it the comfyest thing imaginable and a sure protection from stray summer breezes or penetrating dampness. You recall, of course, the Teddy Bear or bunny blanket—perhaps your own particular baby has one. Well, the quilt, too, may be made into a thing of amusement as well as comfort for her little ladyship or the heir apparent. Before the quilt is made the piece of material that is to be used for the front should be appliqued with rabbits—great big white ones, or baby rabbits of the same color, depending upon your taste and the size of the quilt. A rabbit is just the easiest thing to cut out. If you are an artist you may do it so realistically that the bunnies seem to breathe; but if you are an everyday mortal you can make them so grotesquely cute and yet simple that you and baby may find them much more attractive than bunnies cut out by a sure-enough artist. The background of the quilt should be pink or blue, for the rabbits are to be quite according to Mother Nature's prescription—white. Cut a large circle for the body of the rabbit and a circle about a third of the size of the large one for the rabbit's head. The rabbit's long ears may be cut in one with the smaller circle, or they may be applied afterward. Draw two circles in the smaller circle for the rabbit's eyes, a line for its mouth and two dots for its nostrils. A very tiny circle is cut and attached to the edge of the large circle for the bunny's little cotton tail. Then proceed to embroider the eyes, mouth and nose with pink silk or mercerized cotton. The three circles are basted into the proper position upon the quilt to form the rabbit, and then the tiniest of edges is turned in about the rabbit and the whole appliqued to the background. A row of these rabbits may be placed about the entire edge, or a large center rabbit may be the only bunny used, if you have not time for the border. Cats and puppies can be fashioned in much the same way.

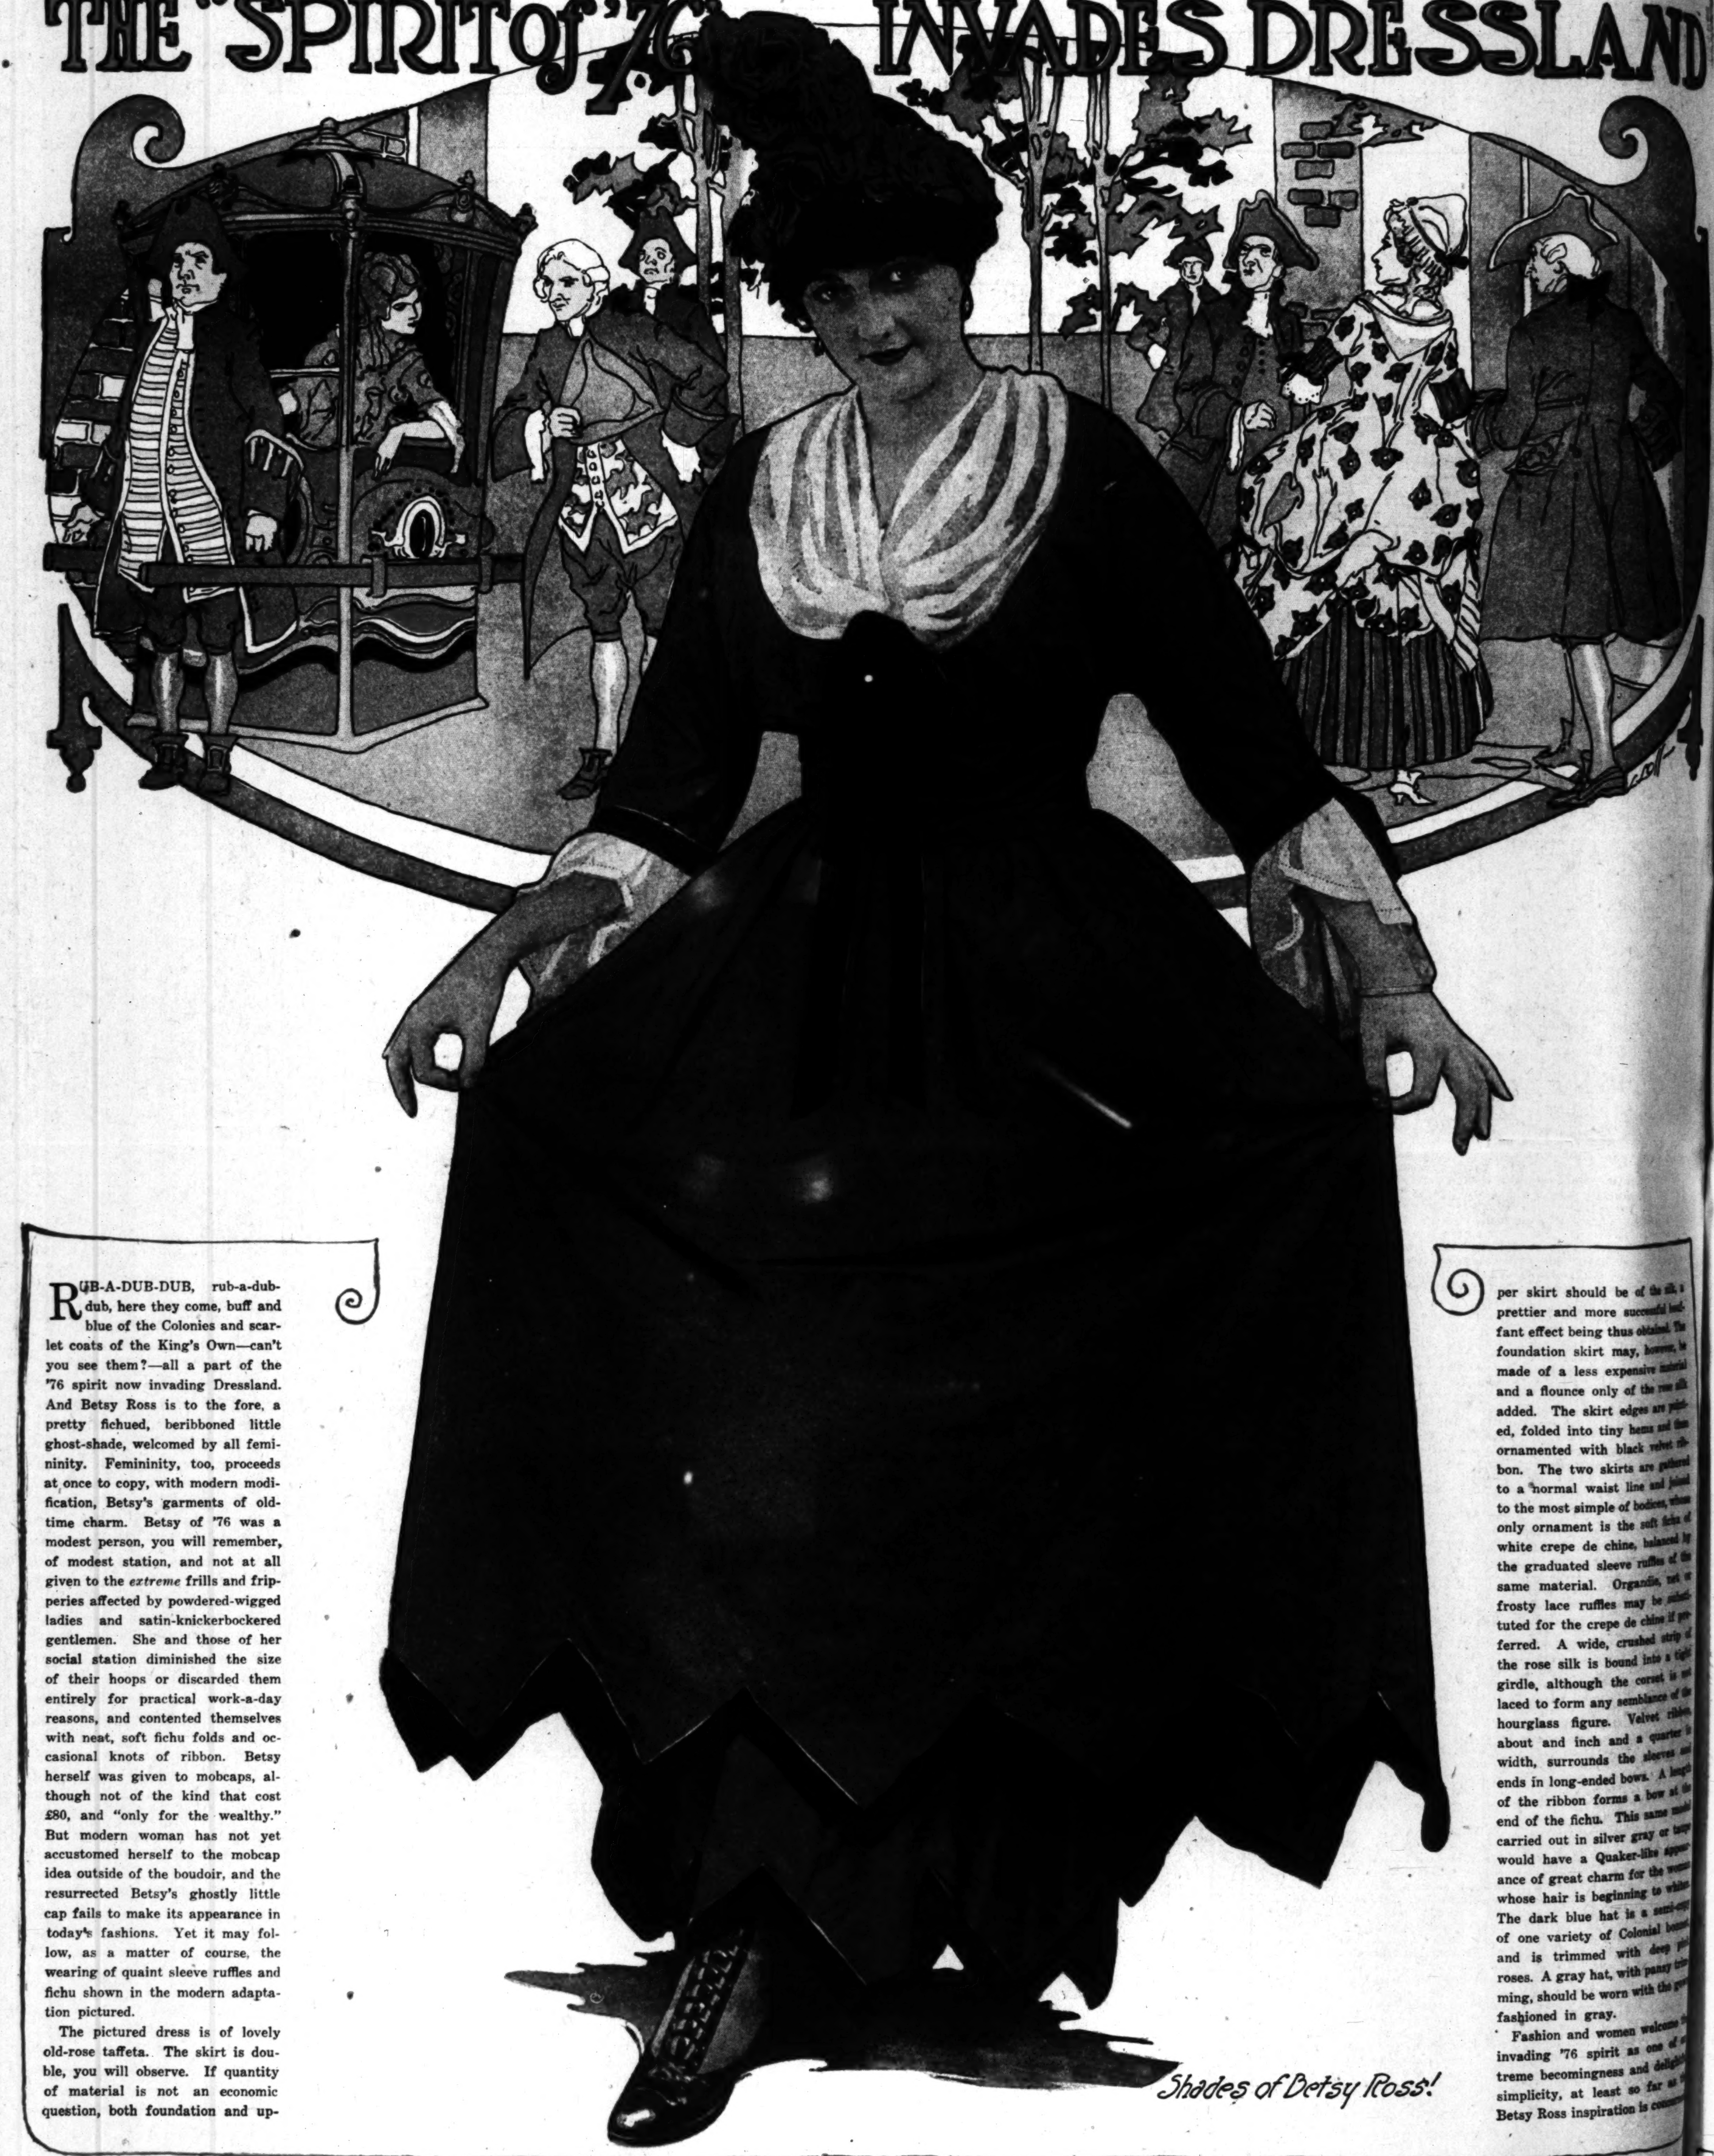
White Linen Spats

WOMEN have grown so fond of spats that they have insisted upon wearing them during the summer months; but they have also demanded a cooler material than that which was used for the spats of winter. Therefore, linen spats have been launched forth, and show some wonderful touches of needlework on them. Others are severely plain, having nothing but a scalloped edge and buttonholed eyelets, through which bone or crocheted buttons are passed. In some instances the stitches are white, but more often they are in colors.

Both conventional and realistic designs are used on the spats, but the former seem more appropriate for the purpose.

If you have a pair of cloth spats, you can use them as a pattern to make several pairs of linen spats, to be worn with your various summer costumes.

THE "SPIRIT of '76" INVADES DRESSLAND



Shades of Betsy Ross!

RUB-A-DUB-DUB, rub-a-dub-dub, here they come, buff and blue of the Colonies and scarlet coats of the King's Own—can't you see them?—all a part of the '76 spirit now invading Dressland. And Betsy Ross is to the fore, a pretty fichued, beribboned little ghost-shade, welcomed by all femininity. Femininity, too, proceeds at once to copy, with modern modification, Betsy's garments of old-time charm. Betsy of '76 was a modest person, you will remember, of modest station, and not at all given to the extreme frills and fripperies affected by powdered-wigged ladies and satin-knickerbockered gentlemen. She and those of her social station diminished the size of their hoops or discarded them entirely for practical work-a-day reasons, and contented themselves with neat, soft fichu folds and occasional knots of ribbon. Betsy herself was given to mobcaps, although not of the kind that cost £80, and "only for the wealthy." But modern woman has not yet accustomed herself to the mobcap idea outside of the boudoir, and the resurrected Betsy's ghostly little cap fails to make its appearance in today's fashions. Yet it may follow, as a matter of course, the wearing of quaint sleeve ruffles and fichu shown in the modern adaptation pictured.

The pictured dress is of lovely old-rose taffeta. The skirt is double, you will observe. If quantity of material is not an economic question, both foundation and upper skirt should be of the silk, a prettier and more successful bouffant effect being thus obtained. The foundation skirt may, however, be made of a less expensive material and a flounce only of the rose silk added. The skirt edges are pinked, folded into tiny hems and then ornamented with black velvet ribbon. The two skirts are gathered to a normal waist line and joined to the most simple of bodices, whose only ornament is the soft fichu of white crepe de chine, balanced by the graduated sleeve ruffles of the same material. Organdie, net or frosty lace ruffles may be substituted for the crepe de chine if preferred. A wide, crushed strip of the rose silk is bound into a tight girdle, although the corset is not laced to form any semblance of the hourglass figure. Velvet ribbon, about and inch and a quarter in width, surrounds the sleeves and ends in long-ended bows. A length of the ribbon forms a bow at the end of the fichu. This same model carried out in silver gray or taupe would have a Quaker-like appearance of great charm for the woman whose hair is beginning to whiten. The dark blue hat is a semi-copy of one variety of Colonial bonnet and is trimmed with deep pink roses. A gray hat, with pansy trimming, should be worn with the gown fashioned in gray.

Fashion and women welcome the invading '76 spirit as one of extreme becomingness and delightful simplicity, at least so far as the Betsy Ross inspiration is concerned

THE CITY AND THE COAST.

A WHOLE trainload of motorists are coming here from Chicago June 27. We shall all be mighty glad to see them, and we hope they will bring their automobiles, but if any of them do not they will find plenty of good ones here and good roads on which to operate them.

BAKERSFIELD is going to try the city-manager form of government. We don't think much of that style, but Bakersfield certainly has the best thing possible under the handicap. It has selected a wise old editor as its first manager.

THE new Rincon road will be dedicated July 4 with mountain water instead of champagne. It is wise for automobilists to abjure wine. Champagne and gasoline make a mighty dangerous mixture, especially for midnight drives.

TUNA packers at the Los Angeles Harbor have made contracts with 125 boats for all the fish they can catch. This is certainly one of Southern California's most legitimate industries. It is an old saw that the sea holds just as good fish as ever were caught. Now if it also holds just as many more as were ever caught, the packers will thrive.

LET no one be deceived by the fact that 100 members of the Los Angeles Traffic Association went to San Francisco to join in the celebration of Transportation Day at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. They never went up there in order to take somebody to San Francisco. They only went to see how many they could bring back.

America Ueber Alles.

IT GOES without saying that America first and last is the true American sentiment in the minds of all Americans worthy of the name without distinction of parties, religions or any other subdivision of the nation.

With the best fundamental government ever organized by the mind of man, this has been the sentiment of all American statesmen worthy of the title, with very few and negligible exceptions. Those who have governed the country in the past have been impressed with the idea that the government functions were first to protect the lives and property of all individuals from the highest to the lowest against all other citizens or against any combination of citizens. The next function of government in the minds of these great men was to encourage and foster American industries in order to secure a prosperous condition of life for all the people of the country. In the past our great men did not trouble themselves much about abstract morality, and not at all about religion. They very properly left these things to family culture and church teaching.

The industries of the country at the close of the Revolutionary War were all in the infantile stage, weak and crude. To achieve industrial independence as well as political liberty was the first thought of the great fathers of the republic. When with this in mind that great American statesman Alexander Hamilton injected into the platform of the Federal party a provision looking for the protection of our infant industries, Thomas Jefferson, the leader of the Republican party, another great American statesman, replied practically in these words: "For every step the Federalists take in this direction we will take two."

Andrew Jackson is known as the patron saint of the Democratic party. In his message to Congress in 1830 he roundly denounced those who were selling imported products in our markets as carrying out "a selfish and destructive policy." He declared emphatically the right on the part of America to protect our people against this "by imposing protective duties, else our people and political system would present the anomaly of a people stripped of the rights to foster their industry."

These are matters of history somewhat ancient to most of our readers. But many of us can remember as a matter of experience that when Cleveland was elected President it was on a platform directly protective in its provisions. When in 1888 he was defeated it was on a practically free-trade platform providing for the importation of wool without duties. But the people were afraid that in this it was a matter of the thin end of the wedge which if driven home would work ruin to all our industries.

Whenever the two great political parties have gone before the country with the protective tariff or free trade as the issue, the protectionists have won, unless where the issue was clouded or buried under some other issue more important in the minds of the people at the time.

Of course, there is a reason in the past for the South being in favor of free trade. The reason was that it had no industries to protect. This condition is past, and it is amazing to notice the number of Southerners, old men dyed in the wool in their devotion to their section of the country, who are now avowed protectionists.

It seems to us that now is the time of all times to take the tariff out of politics, as it is becoming rapidly a national policy with fewer opponents to the policy than in the past. It may be the issue in the next Presidential election, but if it is and is squarely faced the protectionists will win. If it could be taken out of politics and become the national policy, then it would be possible to revive a tariff commission, not to fix the schedules, but to study carefully conditions and report their findings to Congress, which would form a basis on which to frame a scientific tariff.

Being Good and Great.

LOS ANGELES has passed adolescence and gone into long pants.

Look at the new map.

One leg goes into the large wet ocean and the other extends to the massive mountains beyond the verdant vale of San Fernando. It is a city from the Sierras to the sea.

Only New York now has a greater area than the metropolis of the sunset coast, and great Gotham surpasses us by only a trifling matter of some eight or nine square miles. Our last annexation took in considerable territory, but a scant population. We rounded up a sparkling expanse of scenery, but not many people. When the limits of the city are properly made to include such splendid suburban jewels as Pasadena, Glendale, Alhambra, South Pasadena, Eagle Rock, Santa Monica. Venice, Ocean Park and Long Beach we will have the greatest municipality in the world in point of area—not to mention intelligence and beauty—and the sixth city in America in population.

Furthermore, this big town honestly tries to be good. A place that is named after the angels should hold a considerable number of citizens who could qualify for wings in the finals.

Many large cities seem to glory in their shame. That is, they are proud that they are indecent. Some of the dwellers profess to believe that to be virtuous is to be lonely. They offer the visitor all the varied forms of vice and dissipation and call it entertainment.

When the average citizen of New York or San Francisco wants to give a friend a good time, his idea is to fill his skin full of fizzes and load him into a joy wagon with a brace of frivolous fairies from the chorus. When he gets far enough along to forget his name, his number and his family, he is supposed to be having a lovely visit. When he awakens in the morning and sees strange and puzzling decorations on the wall and unfamiliar scenery from the window, he knows he is having a wonderful time, even if his throat be parched or his pulse wobbly.

But Los Angeles strives to be different. The average man is not a sissy—neither is he blase. He feels that there can still be good in the beautiful. No one need suffer from thirst, and yet the stranger is not constantly thrown into the company of hilarious and pestiferous soaks. The Los Angeles man has mastered the problem of how to take a drink or leave it alone. In other words, he conducts his dissipation unobtrusively and frets not his neighbor or himself.

When Chicago was enjoying its most exquisite immorality it had a saloon for every 200 inhabitants, and some of the mining camps fancied that a ginmill for every man was about right. In Los Angeles there is a bar for about every 2500 inhabitants, and they are so located that they disturb and affront nobody. They do not jump out and bite people as they pass. They do not have glaring signs or alluring music. They are merely licensed places for the dispensation of thirst quenchers, and they are regulated and controlled in the most complete and finished fashion. A license is a valuable asset, a thing to be guarded and treasured, and a man who has one doesn't care to jeopardize it by misbehavior.

Vice is not exterminated from Los Angeles, but it is kept in the cellar with a muzzle on. It is not paraded through the streets.

When the ordinary Los Angeles man has a friend to entertain, he does not necessarily take him down to the Y.M.C.A. library for a game of checkers, or to a missionary meeting for tea. Neither does he fill his tank full of foam and take away his watch and chain.

Not any.

There is a happy medium.

He has him out for a spin over the splendid boulevards that roll from the rugged rocks to the silvery sea. The varied diversions of the beach—harmless dissipations in themselves, are to be enjoyed. There is a round of golf and an afternoon at the ball game. There is a visit to the Mission Play or a trip to beautiful Catalina or the orange-blossom belt. There are a thousand and one places to go and things to see, and most of them are out in nature's magnificent open, with a blue sky overhead and delightful greenery roundabout.

It beats hanging over a sloppy bar or playing jackpots all night in a stuffy room.

Paying Tribute to Outsiders.

THE Federal government, that of the State of California, and private people in California, principally near the scene of action, have contributed money in the sum of nearly $100,000 to construct a bridge across the Colorado River near Yuma. Of course, every patriotic Californian is delighted to have the viaduct built, as a link, and an important one, in the great overland highway that we hope to see in operation before many years roll by.

But why have this contract go abroad to enrich manufacturers on the other side of the continent and to deplete our own country of the money spent upon the bridge? There is no reason in the world why steel works and other mills concerned in the building of this viaduct should not exist here in Los Angeles. We have the capital, the raw material, the labor, and every element to build up such an industry.

There is an important lesson in this for us all. The era of manufactures is upon us here in Los Angeles, and in order to secure the further growth of the city in population and in wealth it will be necessary "to get up early and late take rest" in the developing of our manufacturing industries. It is only now and then when some object lesson like this bridge presents itself with all the emphasis of a slap in the face that we bat our eyes, wake up, and then take notice of what is to be done.

Of course in years Los Angeles is only a baby, but in wealth, brains and other concomitants of industry the infant city has the thews of a municipal Hercules. Our intelligent capitalists will not have to have many such object lessons forced upon their attention before they will wake up and do things.

THE Automobile Club of Southern California has gathered statistics to prove that since January 2, $351,000 worth of automobiles have been stolen in Los Angeles. Auto thefts for the first twenty days in May amounted to $53,000. Just as statistics these figures are more interesting than they are valuable. They tend to support the theory that automobiles are numerous and that the thieving business has been good, but they bring no particular comfort to the people whose machines are stolen.

They seem to have let the cat out of the bag at Long Beach by making a raid on a blind pig. The logically-minded detectives when looking for liquids naturally went to a poolroom.

Not Forgotten.

A VETERAN'S WORD TO HIS FORMER COMRADES.

By Col. W. J. Handy.

When Rip van Winkle returned to his native village, after twenty years' absence, which seemed to him but a day, no one knew him, he was stared at curiously in his antiquated costume. His numerous inquiries for his old acquaintances met only the reply, "No, don't know him, guess he has been dead a long time." Does any one remember Rip Van Winkle? And the reply, "No, don't know him, or any such person." Poor Rip turns away with bowed head, and the pathetic remark, "Are we so soon forgotten when we are gone?"

No, old comrades, looking down from the heights above, you are not forgotten.

All over the North are gathered on Memorial Day the remnant of the old guard, citizens of a younger generation and school children, to show their appreciation of the living, and to those who have answered the last call "whose lances rust, whose hearts are dust, whose souls are with the Lord we trust," proof that they are not forgotten.

Remember that long, hot day's march? Stifling dust and parched tongue, when your shoulder comrade said: "Here Steve, I have a litle left, it is warm, but it's water," and handed the canteen over to you, a small swallow and handing it back, there was no protest over what was left.

Forgotten him? No! no!

Remember, when in that hot fight, an unlucky bullet put your leg out of use? And that bunk-mate said: "Jim, give me your gun, put your arms around my shoulders, and I will help you back where the ambulance will pick you up."

Forgotten him? Never!

Do you remember the comrades in that scouting party, through dark woods, over an unknown road, with muffled steps and whispered talk, to ascertain the enemies' lines? Found only when there came a volley and their position was revealed, and then a running fight, a long way back, and how we helped the one who was wounded, safe into camp.

They are all gone now, but not forgotten!

The old veterans will look over their mental album, this memory day, recalling some incident of the days of long ago, but not forgotten, days when they helped to make history:

"There are names and faces by the score, old friends,
To which our hearts once clung,
But there's a mist in my eye, as the boys go by,
And I seem to lose my tongue.
For I dream of the men we used to know,
In the long gone battle days,
In the weary tramps, in fields and camps,
And I see them through the haze."

Dear old regiment, its tents are struck, scattered the ashes of its camp fires, folded the banner that lighted its way, silent the bugles that beckon to fame, across the abyss of death, vanished the lines that shone in the morning sun, mustered out the friendly band that, shoulder to shoulder, stormed the gates to glory—so it rises and stands before me today, with the ranks all full, few the living, they the immortal, swelling together the roll of honor, that goodly company of souls that were and are the dear old regiment.

Forgotten? No, never!

"Dad," Welsh Term of Affection.

A correspondent of the Christian Herald, the Rev. John K. Nutting, writes: 'I am convinced that the custom of using 'dad' or 'dady' as a substitute for papa or father has not arisen from any other motive than sincere affection. 'Dad' (sometimes 'tad' or 'thad') is a word for father in Welsh, and is used as such in the Lord's Prayer in the Welsh New Testament. Doubtless 'dad' or 'daddy' has come to us through the intermarriage of Welsh and English. So considered, it is really an affectionate enrichment of our language."

GOOD LITTLE POEMS.

Peace Hymn.

(Sung to tune of "America.")

God save our land from war
Grant us a peaceful shore,
God keep us free.
Let us, with hopeful mind,
Bring peace to all mankind,
That brotherhood may bind
All men to Thee.

God save our youth to us,
God save the truth through us,
Ideals hard won.
Won through the ages past,
Shall they be lost at last?
O let us hold them fast
Till war is done.

May we all strive to build,
Even with hands unskilled,
The home of peace.
If its foundation be,
Love, wisdom, charity,
With power to bind the three
Then war will cease.

We know the tyrants' power
Lasts but the briefest hour,
And then is gone.
We know that selfish gain
Means but our brother's pain
When God alone shall reign
World peace will dawn.

—[Woman's National Weekly.

These Evils.

'Tis like the worm within the heart
Of rose, that's hidden from the eye,
Is Hate; yet does its ruthless part
To blast the soul that may not die!

'Tis like a foul and noxious weed
That poisons all the air around,
Is Envy; yet its rankling seed
May in the truest heart be found!

'Tis like a vine to creep and cling
And smother in its close embrace,
Is Fear; and yet its tendrils fling
Round limbs that else might win the race!

'Tis like a frost that blights the bloom,
Chills balmy air to wintry wind,
Is Pride, and yet its chilly tomb
Imprisons oft the noble mind!

Then cast these evils from your life;
God gave it for a purpose fair—
For Love, for Hope, for glorious strife,
That you, your brother's burden share.

Slavonic Names.

[Indianapolis News:] As the newspaper reader is likely to be in conflict with Polish and Russian names for some time to come it may be well for him to take such aid as may be proffered in the attempts that he may make to achieve their pronunciation. A British linguist gives some information concerning the word "Przemysl." He says that "Zhemeesl" is the practical method of expressing its sound, and if the speaker cares to put "the shadow of the echo of a dream of a letter p" before it he will then be as nearly correct as it is humanly possible to get. The syllable "msyl," says the authority, is both Polish and Russian for "thought," or "craft," in the sense of "handicraft"—and "prze" is analagous to the prefix "pre," as anciently the place was a city for the trades or handicrafts. English-speaking people have a conception of the "w" as a vowel, which does not exist among the Slavonic races. Where we say Cracow or Krakow, the proper pronunciation is Krakuff. The Russian, where we set "w" as a concluding letter, has it as a double v or a single or double f. There are many difficult names which become easy when it is realized that "j" equals "y" or "i" and "w" equals "v" or "ff," and "prz" equals approximately "zh."

[Washington Star:] "Did you catch any fish?" asked the woman who is always encouraging.

"Not one," replied her husband. "We got a couple of nibbles, and then there was nothing doing all day."

"Yes. The kind of goggles an aviator uses."

Prof: What kind of an example is that?

Stude: A concrete example.

[Houston Post:] "A Hartford minister says there are just four kinds of women."

"That's the most remarkable thing I ever heard of."

"That a minister should make such a statement?"

"No; that there is a minister who has never known but four women."

Coast Defenses.

UNDOUBTEDLY George W. Goethals is an authority on any matter pertaining to war. His judgment that the Dardanelles cannot be forced by an attack from the sea will be generally accepted as a correct view. It is comforting to learn from the mouth of this authority that New York and San Francisco are similarly impregnable from any attack by the combined fleets of the world.

But this must not be seized upon by shallow enthusiasts as equal to a conclusion that our coast defenses are all they ought to be. The Queen Elizabeth and all the other superdreadnaughts, dreadnaughts and all the other ships of the allied fleets may be unable to force the Dardanelles. Those besieging those narrow straits have arrived at this conclusion for themselves, but they have not abandoned the siege. As the Japanese failed to force Port Arthur with their powerful fleet, but took it by a land attack, so the allied armies are now working into and behind the forts along the Dardanelles, and if the great authority quoted above were to express his opinion on this undertaking, he would no doubt prophesy success.

Let us take our own home metropolis and see how San Francisco might be taken. In case of any trouble with a foreign nation there would be no frontal attack made on San Francisco, but a landing could be made at Half Moon Bay, at Santa Cruz or at Monterey, and then a land army could easily take the forts around San Francisco from the rear.

When Caesar landed his army in Britain it was a bigger task for him to convey a few legions across the narrow seas in his open boats than it was for the allies to land 200,000 men on the Gallipoli Peninsula. They brought their timbers in their ships and built wharves along the coast to which their transports tied up, and on which they landed their armies with all their equipment, including siege guns, cavalry horses, ammunition, and stores for their men.

Come right home. If in the next ten years we should have a brush with any powerful modern nation with an efficient fleet, San Pedro might be fortified more strongly than the Dardanelles, but all the money would be wasted, the guns would be useless, for the reason that the enemy would not try to force an entrance into the harbor. They would land at Santa Monica or down at Naples, throwing out pontoon bridges from their ships perhaps, or if that were not practicable they could follow the example of the invaders of the Dardanelles and build wharves where their troops might land.

We are learning a great deal from the wars of the present day. The Japanese in their attack upon Port Arthur invented the gopher style of warfare in which they dug themselves into trenches, burrowed underground and crept foot by foot up to the walls of the fortress, a modern defensive work which was unable to resist their assault.

We have a lot to do to prepare ourselves not for war but for peace. It is the blindest kind of foolishness to go on living in a fool's paradise, persuading ourselves that we can live in peace with all the world, or resist attack with our bare hands if the attack comes upon us. We should double our navy with all possible speed. We should have a skeleton of an army thoroughly equipped and trained with at least half a million men. We should have a powerful fleet of submarine war vessels, another of transports, and in addition to this we should fortify our cities from attack by land and sea.

A poverty-stricken nation could sail a fleet into Santa Monica Bay, land an army, and levy tribute of $200,000,000 on Los Angeles, looting the vaults of every bank in the city. Look at China!

A Long Pull and a Strong Pull.

NOW is the time for all the people of the country without regard to any kind of divisions among them to get together and work persistently, intelligently and earnestly for the building up of our oversea commerce.

When the republic was first founded it had no manufactories worth speaking of, its industry being overwhelmingly agricultural. This left us little to sell excepting products of the soil and much to buy. Under the conditions the supreme question was the protecting of home markets for our industries, weak and crude as they were. The policy has worked with perfectly marvelous success, and today we have few products of the soil to spare for exports, but a great many of the products of our mills and factories which must find a market abroad if our people are to find continuous employment and if prosperity is to reign throughout the country. Under the conditions of the past it is not at all to be wondered at that our people have not been very efficient as export traders. With our lack of experience it will take a great deal of time, study and patience before we become efficient competitors with other people who have already learned their lesson and are past masters in the art.

That we can learn the lesson and put it to practical results is not to be doubted for a moment. The people of the wonderful intelligence and great vitality of Americans cannot fail of accomplishing what any people on earth have succeeded in doing. Germany twenty-five years ago had scarcely any oversea commerce, but every man and woman in the empire got his shoulders to the wheel and pushed with all his might, so that in the twenty-five years Germany's oversea commerce has become the marvel of the world. There is no doubt in the minds of persons of broad intelligence that jealousy exciting alarm at this wonderful achievement lies deep down at the roots of the present war.

It will require the help of those who make our laws and those who administer them to bring about a successful achievement of the aspirations of the country for a great oversea commerce. Perhaps the best work to be done at the moment by the mass of the people is to pick out men of intelligence in business, broad-minded and capable, to send to Congress. We have been sending to Congress men who have never achieved any success in business for themselves, and worse than that, men who have had no hand in business for others except in a very small way. It ought to be patent to the minds of all people that broad experience and a firm grasp of business is necessary to make a good Congressman.

It will not be easy for us to build up trade among foreign nations, and the war is not likely to make it any easier. When the war is over there will be a tremendous effort on the part of the nations engaged in the struggle to win back their trade. Now is the time for us to procure a part of the world's business, and we can do it if we go to work at it in the right way.

This will require the study of conditions in the countries where we wish to sell goods. Our manufacturers will have to learn to produce the things needed in the outside world, to put them up in such a way that they will commend themselves to the buyers, and the salesmen who carry on the business abroad will have to be men of broad intelligence, diplomatic and polished, and the first requisite will be a thorough, accurate, critical knowledge of the languages spoken by the people with whom they will have to do business. Besides a careful study of the tongues spoken there will be necessary just as careful a study of the manners of the people.

The Conceit of the Successful.

By Herbert Kaufman.

Most competent men are streaked with narrowmindedness.

There are professions and businesses which necessitate concentrated attention in restricted and specialized fields—which do not call for breadth so much as depth of view.

Such persons are like miners and well diggers—they lose themselves in the shafts they sink and after a while see nothing beyond their close environments.

But the very intensive quality of mind which has rendered them so capable in the management of their own affairs generally unfits them for the competent measurement of values in which they are not experienced.

So don't be thwarted of your enthusiasm and optimism by the discouragement of successful ignoramuses. The self-assurance that comes with prosperity invariably brings with it a degree of conceit and arrogance.

None is so intolerant of undemonstrated ability as those who have recorded their own.

Habituated to unquestioned decision in their own organizations, they are prone to determine arbitrarily the means and methods of procedure for everybody else.

A certain degree of egotism being essential to success, the last man in the world who is likely to acknowledge that he is not qualified to form a sound opinion on any matter is the man who no longer has to fight for the recognition of his views, and mistakes the lick-spittling and flattery of self-seekers and subordinates for an extraordinary gift of judgment.

Therefore, discount the ridicule and superficial estimates with which the average "big man" is liable to weigh an innovation.

The farther removed he is from his own struggles, the more intolerant and conservative grows his attitude toward new strikes.

Commodore Vanderbilt laughed George Westinghouse and his air brake away from his door and considered inventor and invention ridiculous.

And George Westinghouse in turn and in time refused an invitation to attend a dinner to a group of aviation pioneers because a man of his dignity felt that he could not afford to be mixed up with a lot of flying machine fools.

There wouldn't be any hope for you—there wouldn't be room for originality—there'd be no promise for thinkers nor a fighting chance for the next crop of leaders if the world weren't filled with such reactionaries and bourbons.

Believe in yourself and follow your hunch—that's how the very fellows who are now jeering at you got on.

Victory changed their makeup. Napoleon the royalist eventually imposed upon France the very abuses of power and privilege for the eradication of which Bonaparte the republican risked his life.

We all look at outsiders differently when we're "inside."

Every man who fought his way to the throne lost the outlook and convictions that placed him there after he had gained supremacy.

The Turco's Green Fez.

[New York Evening Post:] John T. Oakman, an architect, who drove one of the ambulances of the American Hospital in Northern France for several months last winter, lectured recently on his experiences and the work of the hospital at the studio of Miss Margaret Brown, No. 33 West Sixty-seventh street, for the benefit of the American Hospital. One of the incidents he described proves that even in the hospitals in which the wounded soldiers are nursed back to life a touch of the ridiculous sometimes lightens the work.

"The nurse of this ward," said Mr. Oakman, "a pretty and distinguished looking lady, in a wide-winged coif, was at some pains to show us her pet patient, a very big, very black and very contented Turco in a green fez. She told us that when he was first brought in he was quite badly wounded and unconscious. They removed his clothing, soaked with mud and blood, and put him in a hospital wrapper, while his uniform was sent to be cleaned. After the Turco had been placed in his bed and the clothing was out of the way the interpreter, an old African soldier, rushed up to the surgeon in charge.

" 'For the love of heaven bring him back his green fez before he wakes up!' gasped the interpreter.

" 'Why?' returned the surgeon. 'It's dirty enough—'

" 'Yes, yes, but he wears it to show that he has made the pilgrimage to Mecca, and he had undoubtedly never had it off since. If he discovers it has been sterilized there will be more slaughter in this ward than in the trench he has just come out of.' "

The Reunion.

"You damned ol' Yank!" says he.
"You Johnny Reb!" says I.
An' thar we laid at Chattanoogy, cussin' some,
While bullets whistled past jes' like a bee hive's hum;
An' nary one w'u'd move, for both on us was shot—
He in the laigs an' I—all you, as like as not
Have saw that I'm a little shy o' laigs, myself,
But still I ain't by no means put upon the shelf.
Wall, as I started out to tell: We laid thar hours
Beneath the brilin' sun—thar warn't no shady bowers"
Within a hunned miles. I got to know his face
So's I would know it if I seen it any place;

An' as he had no better thing to do, he glared
At me an' we both thought, till help come, we was paired
To die fer sure.
I never thought o' him agin
Until today—Memorial Day. I caught a grin
Jes' as we'd put some flowers on a Johnny's grave;
An' thar he was, in gray, on crutches—but still brave!
An' smiles broke out a-tween us thick as chicken pox—
I wisht ye'd hearn the cheers when hands we locks!
"You damned ol' Yank!" says he.
"You Johnny Reb!" says I.

At My Wife's Wedding.

many more interesting things for us to talk about.

"It will not be long before I can claim you as my wife and we will end all this deception," I told her. "My interest in the mine will keep us from starving, at least. But tell me about this lord. Has he been making love to you?"

"Trying to," she replied with a troubled look in her eyes. "He has asked me to marry him and seems to get a sort of satisfaction out of the fact that we are to pretend to be married this evening in that silly play of Mr. Stannard's."

"Oh, there is a mock marriage."

"Yes, right at the last."

"Who acts the part of the minister?"

"Mr. Blout. He is a real minister and we had to overcome his prejudice to acting, even in an amateur production. It is just like a real marriage except, of course, that there is no license."

"How does your father regard Perthfield's suit."

"He wants me to marry a title and has advised me to accept him. We had a terrible quarrel and I came near telling him the truth. Oh, Fred, let's end all this as quickly as possible. It can't make any difference what father says now."

"Then, dearest, don't be surprised at what I may do during the marriage ceremony this evening."

Though she pressed me to tell her more of my plan I thought it best to say nothing about the license that Perthfield had secured. We passed the afternoon in a sort of bewildering dream. The world held only us two.

As soon as I had taken Imogene back to the Alaric I hunted up Gray.

"Look here, Gray," I said. "if two people go through a marriage ceremony which one thinks is only a joke, being tricked into that belief, is the marriage binding?"

"It is, though it should be easy enough for the person deceived to secure an annulment by due process of law."

I had learned all that I wished to know. The whole plot lay bare before me. That Nettleton was conspiring with Perthfield to trick Imogene into a marriage with the Englishman, there was no room to doubt. They counted upon her to bow to her father's will and accept the situation after the deception was made known to her.

It was a clever scheme, but it should fail, I resolved as I resurrected my dress suit and prepared to take dinner with the Nettleton party.

Her father contrived to place Imogene and Lord Perthfield at the farther end of the table from me. As a result that dinner was a horrible torture to me. The vivacious young woman on my left utterly failed to elicit anything more than monosyllables. Perthfield several times caught me glaring at him and smiled back in a patronizing way.

At last dinner was over and I sat around with the older persons while the amateur Thespians prepared for the play.

I do not know what Stannard's play was about, whether it was as dry and stupid as himself or a dramatic gem. It was given without scenery in a cleared space at one end of the observation car. With tense face and straining eyes I sat and watched Imogene. I felt like murdering the thin, weak little lord whenever he touched her.

Suddenly I realized that the time had come for me to act. She stood with Lord Bertrand, her hand on his arm, and before them stood Blout. Rather nervously his lordship produced a paper—the license that I had seen him buy that very afternoon!

"Wait a moment!" I called loudly. Leaping to my feet, I rushed forward, seized the license from the hands of the astonished minister and tore it twice across.

A roar as of an enraged bull came from behind me and Nettleton's heavy hand crashed down on my shoulder.

"What do you mean by butting in like this, you counfounded puppy?" he demanded.

"It means," I retorted calmly, "that I married your daughter in New York, eight months ago, and I object to having my wife made a bigamist."

Was not Guilty.

[Harper's Magazine:] "You admit you are guilty, then?" thundered the judge.

"Ah do, jedge. Ah's guilty. Ah stole dem pants. But, your honah, dere ain't no sin when de motive am good. Ah stole dem pants to get baptized in."

Granddad of the Movies.

"Perhaps you would say a few words to the comrades and corps members."

Grand-dad looked distressed.

"We'll see," said the director.

"We'd like to have you, too, Mr. Brigham, and the rest of your company—those who were in 'Happy Hours.'" The intoxication of the movies was upon her and she would have asked the entire twenty companies if Mr. Brigham had not said once more:

"We'll see."

Mrs. Dorne rose to go. "You're Comrade Osborne's grandson, Mr. Brigham tells me," she remarked, smiling at Paul. "You were in the picture, so you'll be with us that day. I'm sure you'll induce your grandfather to come and to speak to us."

After this invitation grand-dad grew restless. Paul was working in a series of fairy tales and the old man was much alone. The boy invariably found him anxiously searching his wallet and he always turned pleading eyes to his grandson as he put back the much-handled papers.

Mr. Brigham's noncommittal "We'll see," became a definite acceptance of the invitation from Palmyra Relief Corps. Grand-dad and Paul were to go with Mr. Brigham and Miss Carlisle in the director's machine; but through misunderstanding as to time they were separated. Later, when Paul stood on the steps of the operahouse where the exercises were to be held, he watched the other studio automobiles drive up; but his grandfather was in none of them. Presently his mother came, with friends. After seeing her to a seat he returned to the door; but was finally persuaded to take a seat near the entrance, where he could catch the first sight of the late comer.

"Happy Hours" was run, and still granddad had not come. Every sound outside sent Paul's heart fluttering and only Miss Carlisle's restraining hand kept him in his seat.

Presently the commander ordered his post forward and the band played the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" as the line of blue wavered up the steps leading to the stage. The white-gowned corps streamed past the banked red geraniums, but Paul saw nothing but stinging stars as he choked back tears he would die rather than let men see. Grand-dad the special guest, and he not here!

Mr. Brigham and Company Four followed. Margery Carlisle waited for her "pal;" but he turned his face to the window and she went on the stage without him.

Then came the bugle call. The fragrant air floated through the opened windows as the high, piercing sweet note set the veterans tapping with foot or cane.

A nearer tap-tap, tap-tap caught Paul's ear. He knew that tap! With head up and shining eyes he fell in step with his grandfather and together they passed down the center aisle.

The post commander gave a signal and "Hail to the Chief" crashed forth, drowning the staccato of the crutches. The audience rose. Grand-dad of the movies had arrived.

As the old man took the honor seat, Paul, slipping the crutches under the chair, noticed that grand-dad held a newly-opened envelope, bulkily full. As the speaker of the day began his welcome the boy motioned to take the letter; but grand-dad held it closer.

Paul never did know what the post commander said. The tumult in his heart was too great. But it concerned grand-dad! Grand-dad honored!

A significant pause caused a flutter of anticipation to run like a whisper through the crowd. When the handsome commander took a velvet box from a near-by table the whisper grew stronger like the gusty wind.

A few telling words, and then Col. Dorne fastened a medal, with a background of red, white and blue ribbon, to grand-dad's new uniform.

"Speech! Speech!"

But grand-dad shook his head. As the cheers and shouts continued he finally put up his hand.

Paul got the crutches ready while granddad tried to put the letter away; but in taking out his wallet to make room for the new package both fell and the contents of the envelope scattered on the floor.

"Friends," grand-dad began, as he rose. "Friends——I——I——thank——" he faltered, trembled; and Paul stood closer.

Before grand-dad could begin again the May breeze, rollicking over the mesa, danced into the hall, lifting the loose sheets. Mr. Brigham reached to save them. As he picked up the last and largest he saw something that made him straighten instantly.

"Mr. Chairman!" he exclaimed. "Commander! Just a moment, please. Here's something——" he choked in his excitement, and waved long-folded papers, then turned to the trembling old man.

"Grand-dad!" he shouted, "here are your pension papers!"

Was it the wind that loosened the flag so that a fold swayed around grand-dad's head? A cheer began, but suddenly hushed, for the veteran's face was transformed.

"Why—of course—now I remember—I was hurt—I gave—they must have come—this—morning." He stopped, looking directly at his daughter, who in the tense moment, had risen. Paul grew white.

Mr. Brigham, figuring fast on the note that had fallen from the envelope, did not listen. Instantly he called again:

"Commander! Friends! The man with whom grand-dad left his pension papers back East recognized him in 'Happy Hours' and sent them to him, care of our company."

Another shout began, but ceased as the director indicated that he had more to say.

"Grand-dad's pension was allowed in 1879, drawing $40 a month—on account of his disablement. And, grand-dad," he concluded, "your back pension amounts now to about $20,000!"

"Twenty thousand dollars!" whispered grand-dad. He seemed to grow taller, younger, as he smiled protestingly at his daughter—at Paul. He lifted his eyes reverently. His lips moved:

"Thank God!"

Language Changes.

[London Globe:] Language, like almost everything else, is unable to escape from being conditioned and modified by war. Half our best metaphors are taken from war as it used to be, and we still talk of nations "taking the sword," though that is just what they never do, when "moving the howitzer" would be vastly more appropriate. Modern artillery has forced us to make a verb out of a noun and to permit our gunners to "shell" a place in defiance of all conceivable rules of grammar. We have forced "offensive" and "objective" to do duty as nouns in spite of the fact that they are plain and indubitable adjectives, and we freely "bombard," though it would be quite as reasonable for a pillow fighter to say be "pillowed."

Perhaps the most curious thing in this connection is the way in which we have been driven back upon the old verb "flee." Before the era of the Zeppelin and the aeroplane we should certainly have said "the German fleet 'flies' before the British;" now we say it "flees," because "flying" seems to connote motion above the surface of the earth. There are a hundred subtle differences of this sort to which war has impelled us, and from which the most pedantic purist is totally unable to escape.

The Universal Prayer.

"Oh, God," the stricken Belgians pray,
"Look down upon the battlefield,
Where shot and shell make grim array,
And guard the trench where they have kneeled;
Save them, but bring us peace this day!"

The waiting English join the cry,
"Oh, help us, God, for Thou alone
Canst watch the place where they may lie;
Thy strength, today, God give our own,
And grant us peace, before they die!"

"Oh, God," the German mothers plead,
"Do not forsake our sons, not yet;
Be kind to them, Thy help they need;
But God, we ask, do not forget
Our daily prayer for peace to heed!"

Thus hearts of warring nations pray,
Nor can our God resist them long!
The men in camp or on the way
Lift up this prayer in place of song:
"God give us life and peace, this day."

"Oh, God," we pray, "Thy day of peace
For all these hearts do not withold!
May not America release
The world from war? Thy plan unfold
To us, that we may bid strife cease!"

For God on man must still depend
To speak to men. A savior send!

The Treasure of Cazonci.

man, they emerged into a larger chamber than that of the opening—the inside of the pyramid.

"—and so they filled the sepulcher where before they had placed him (the Cazonci) there they fenced that place with shields of gold and of silver—"

Pascual and his companion were a long time conveying their treasure from its long hiding place in the tomb of the Cazonci. A part of it, at fabulous prices, found its way to European museums. A part was melted up into modern silver and gold bars. The Indian youth studied law and became a wealthy landholder. Pascual proved to Don Castulo his ability to maintain a wife and family. As his poverty had been the only obstacle to the marriage, Don Castulo could no longer reasonably object. He grouchily listened to Pascual's plea, at first. But as Pascual furnished ample proofs of possessing not only sufficient means to support a numerous family, but even of riches, Don Castulo's antagonism vanished. Pascual no longer whispered nothings to Concha's ears through iron bars. He was accepted suitor and as such was received in the parlor. Concha's mother discreetly busied herself at the other side of the room during the greater part of the visits and so gave the young people opportunity to converse.

"That piece of parchment, Conchita mia," said Pascual shortly before the wedding ceremony, "I had difficulty in explaining how it came in my possession. I bought it for a good sum of money. But to that, through thee, we owe our happiness."

"My father is as convinced as I am, Pascualito, that thou art the greatest engineer living. None other would ever have found the hidden treasure of the Cazonci."

To Fame.

Fame, yestere'en I thought that thou and I
Might walk together henceforth arm in arm,
For thou hadst smiled upon me, called me thine;
Today I scarce seem worth thy silent frown:
How did I merit such rebuke, unless,
In striving more to please thee, fickle one,
I lost the hard-earned laurels that were mine?

DEAR BRETHREN of the human race, the Eagle has an exceedingly great, an ever-abiding and sincere admiration for you. Your achievements have been greater as the generations have gone by and your progress is something wonderful.

You are not the oldest race on the earth, but you are certainly the greatest. The Eagle tribe were here before you were, and the Eagle eye can look back to a time when humanity first appeared on this globe. Your particular Eagle, dear readers of the Illustrated Weekly, is persuaded that views of that great scientific authority, Herbert Spencer, are exactly right, and that his theory of evolution is the only way of accounting for the differentiation in the various creatures in the world. He thinks it accounts for the different orders, genera, species and varieties of all the various tribes of living things in the vegetable and animal kingdoms.

With this theory in his mind, the Eagle casts his eye back into a time when the most advanced ape ceased to be an ape and yet did not become quite human. It was the missing link that sprang into being there, which your Eagle takes the liberty of naming the penanthrope. Think of peninsula and misanthrope and you will see what the Eagle means. He was neither ape nor man, but he was nearly a man. In other words, the ape shed his caudal appendage and his hirsute wardrobe which he carried on his back. At the same time he ceased to squawk and mutter and acquired an articulate language to express his new-born and developing thought.

It is a long way from that penanthrope to the Greek artists, orators and poets and those that follow after, a long road indeed, from that savage half-brute to Homer, Dante, Milton and Goethe. And it is just as long a road from his nest in the brush or his cave under the hill to the palaces of millionaires out on Orange Grove avenue and along Huntington Drive in Pasadena. Just the same road it is to travel from his wardrobe of skins taken from animals caught in the chase to the modern tailor-made man and his tailor-made mate.

You have made mistakes and are making them still every day. The present year is showing the most terrible human mistake ever made by your race. It is about time in your evolution from the beasts through the savage and barbarian and the half-civilized man to the modern civilized one that you learned to stop cutting one another's throats, blowing one another to pieces with shells, accompanied by the destruction of billions on billions worth of dollars of property made by human hands in times of peace contributing so much to the comfort if not to the happiness of your race.

But what the Eagle admires most about you, beloved friends, is your wonderful ability to turn defeat into victory, to make your mistakes count for progress, as Alfred Tennyson, your poet, says, to "make stepping stones of your dead selves to higher things." There is something that shows the divine in human beings more than anything else. No mere brute ever learned to do this. His mistakes were permanent in their effect and can never be retrieved. So in the midst of the horrors of the war now raging in Europe the Eagle can look through all the smoke of battle and see brighter days beyond for the human race. In spite of the shriek of shells and the terrible din of bursting bombs, above the rattle of musketry and the groans and cries of the dying and the wounded, he can hear notes of harmonious peace for tomorrow.

Your Eagle thinks Tennyson was right when he wrote, "through the ages one increasing purpose runs, and the thoughts of men are broadened with the process of suns." To look at it otherwise would be to take a perfectly brutal view of matters, to forget Providence, and come to the inconceivable notion that blind chance rules the world. It never has been so, is not so and will not be so. You can look back to your pages of history and see where out of defeat you have won victory, where out of mistakes you have made stepping stones of your dead selves to higher things.

There are new elements in the war now devastating half the world, and these produce in the natural course of events unlooked-for situations. As the Eagle sees things, when peace comes, the peaceful nations will have more to say at the end of this war than they have ever had at the close of previous struggles. It is all very well for the belligerents to serve notice on America that unless she gets into the fray on one side or the other she will have nothing to say about the terms of peace. In the strict construction of language this may be so and probably is true. But never before have neutrals suffered so much in the loss of property and lives, in the cutting off of peaceful commerce, as in the present war. The belligerents may make terms of peace as they please among themselves, but after that is done, when the "battle flags are furled" and the "war drums beat no longer," there will be a trumpet call with the voice of a clarion on the part of the neutral nations to regulate affairs in their behalf against a coming struggle.

Your Eagle, brethren, is intensely American, and while his sympathies are very much alive to the aspirations, ambitions, defeats and victories, sufferings and wants, of all people, with him the real philosophy is "America first and last, every day and every year that shines upon the earth." He knows the people of America are brave, competent and efficient, and that they will learn a good deal out of the present war for the future. The Eagle is for peace, not at any price, but righteous peace established on eternal principles of truth and justice. He sees much in the present war that should be a lesson to his countrymen. While the world is so prone to war, while selfishness controls the hearts of so many surrounding nations, and while greed is so rife in the world, it behooves nations to be prepared at all times to take care of themselves in case of any aggression on the part of a bandit nation, an international thief, a world bully or any other improperly-constituted mental attitude on the part of any of our neighbors.

He looks at China, a great, populous, rich nation, peaceful and industrious, content with what she has and wanting nothing of her neighbors, but blind to the fate that is staring her in the face. On a few little islands off her coast is another nation very much smaller, incomparably poorer, but warlike and aggressive, and these, thoroughly prepared for a conflict, dictate terms to their great neighbor and in her lack of preparation she has to acquiesce to the loss of her advantages, of her dignity and honor.

So your Eagle hopes, Americans, that your eyes are open to the situation and that you will put your hands to the work and your shoulders to the wheel to prepare the country not for war but to preserve the peace. The broad seas have hitherto been a rampart of protection around it, but they are so no longer. Modern science and present-day industry have brought things to such a cumulative strength that things can be done today that could not be done in the last century, and things will be done tomorrow which cannot be done today.

There are two great works for you Americans in the future: To provide a larger navy of more powerful ships and a more numerous army, better prepared, more effective coast defenses, more factories for the manufacture of ammunition and arms—this, and then be prepared when the war is over to demand of the belligerents that they will come into "a parliament of man, a federation of the world," and provide for the protection of the rights of neutrals when they break out into a new melee somewhere in the world. This and your trust in the old battle hymn, "Right is right, for God is God, and right the day will win. To doubt would be disloyalty, to falter would be sin." And you will be all right, in the minds of

The Eagle
HIS MARK

THE LANCER

ENGLAND is all stirred up over the war babies which we are led to understand have begun to arrive in overwhelming battalions. One has to admit that this is very embarrassing for England, because she has not yet been invaded and has no one to denounce as a gross violator of women but members of the British army itself. Of course in a case like that it isn't exactly violation. Then it is the foolish, unbalanced young women who jolly well ought to be ashamed of themselves and what is the country coming to anyway?

In this respect the Belgian, French and Polish ladies have a more kindly time of it. They are war victims about whom the country can wax eloquently, virtuously wrathful, the objects of emotional investigations, whose evidence is hearkened unto with a sublime pity. They are almost heroines.

But the English women—well, goodness only knows what they are. What could they be? It is quite obvious that the British soldier is a noble, self-controlled, entirely virtuous fellow, whose only fault is that he cannot bear to deny the women of the country anything they want. If they yearn for babies, nice, British babies of gloriously military origin, he feels it his duty to help in the good work.

But the bishops are dreadfully worried about it. It occupied most of their lordships' time during the recent annual convocation. Even the Bishop of Zanzibar's indictment of the Bishop of Hereford for preferring a gentleman called Canon Streeter, who has written books which the Zanzibar prelate regarded as deviating from orthodoxy, received scant attention in view of the war babies. One pictured their lordship rising with a moral blush as they contributed their opinions to the scandalous state of affairs. One has to admit the reverend gentlemen seemed to be very little informed.

Suffragettes or Antis.

The trouble is most of the erring maidens appear to be anti-suffragettes. Certain sarcastic gentlemen wrote to the papers averring that this thing was the outcome of the recent woman-suffrage propaganda, that it was an aggravated instance of advanced thought as understood by the sex. So the suffragettes made a point of investigating—and they haven't discovered an erring suffragette among them, not even one.

Whereupon other thoughtful gentlemen hastened to write their views to the effect that of course these noble young heroines were all antis, for only among their rank could such unselfish devotion to the British army have been forthcoming. They gave their all that Tommy's last days might be pleasant.

This argument gained a good deal of support, culminating in the suggestion that these unmarried mothers should be treated as war heroines even as the Red Cross nurses and be entitled to pensions from the state. Doubtless, one presumes, pour encourager les autres.

So the Englishwomen's lot would appear to be a hard one. If she is a suffragette of firm principles, she is a selfish creature beneath contempt. If she is an erring anti, she is, according to the vast majority opinion, an unbalanced, little fool, who opinion, an unbalanced little fool, who cessions.

But either way the British Tommy is a gentleman.

The Alien Wife.

Another grievance that the English woman is suffering under is the law of England which insists that a woman adopt her husband's nationality when she marries. When the war broke out all aliens in England were required to register themselves with the authorities. Those that failed to do so have been hauled up before the courts and asked the reason why, among them numerous English women who had married Germans, Swedes, Poles and so on. Some of them were widows and most of them had never been out of England. But that did not help them. Worthy judges admitted the misfortune but sternly maintained that the ladies were alien foreigners who must register under the law and be duly suspected of anti-British sympathies.

When the United States goes to war, which will be directly we have an army and navy big enough to yearn to show off and justify itself, it is going hard with some of our American women. The amiable alien in our midst has shown a nice taste for American brides—and most of our States still maintain the British law that a wife assumes the nationality of her husband at marriage. So unless Hubby has the forethought to be naturalized before his country goes to war with the United States she will find herself an alien of a belligerent country, possibly in her home town, from which she may never have departed, and in certain contingencies, liable to be incarcerated in civilian concentration camps during the duration of the war!

That state of affairs is calculated to convert more women to suffrage than anything else, especially in a country where we are accused of making of woman our deity and worshiping at her shrine.

War Rates.

The report of the London County Council, which controls the rates and taxes for London, is interesting in that a point of such sincere economy has been made that the rate has been reduced two cents in every five dollars since the war broke out. London has no affinity with California in this respect. When war prices began to affect us our State government seized every opportunity to increase State expenditure and add to our burdens. They raised salaries wholesale, appointed new commissions adding thousands to the pay roll, and made so many superfluous appropriations that it seemed as though the last straw which broke the camel's back was about to be loaded on.

Yet we had no war of our own, no legitimate excuse for increased expenditure. The London City Council could have got away with any amount of graft with a fine violent war on the carpet, yet they elected to let this great opportunity slip by and minimize the taxpayers' burden to the best of their ability.

California could teach those London councillors a good deal about politics that they don't seem to know.

Calling Names.

In most every divorce case some of the evidence that is offered alludes to verbal abuse. It must be confessed that very few people know how to quarrel with any polished finesse. The whole art of quarreling scientifically is to make the other fellow lose his temper and to keep one's own in good control. Calling names is about the lowest form of quarreling there is, and it usually rebounds upon the utterer. Nothing is quite so illuminating as the sort of rude names an angry man elects to call his opponent—a very accurate indication of breeding.

I remember a literary journal once conducting a competition in invective. Contestants were required to compose a violently invective essay against an imaginary enemy so skilfully that it should not redound to the discredit of the speaker. And, believe me, it can't be done. The more brilliantly mean you are, the more obviously unpleasant you show yourself to be. And if you select what you are pleased to consider some peculiarly descriptive names of an insulting order, it reflects straight back upon yourself and your own character, for all the world as though you were talking to a mirror.

Our school children show a marked preference for the name-calling type of controversy. "You big boob," "You dirty sneak," "Gosh darn you, you liar," and so forth, can be heard issuing from the youthful lips of childhood wherever two or three are gathered together. And one pauses to observe the small boy who utters the insult, rather than the object of his rhetoric. It is he for whom you blush.

[Houston Post:] "Well, how about that little bill?"

"But I told you to call at 4 o'clock, and it is only 3 now."

"I know it; I wanted to catch you in."

"Home, Sweet Home" - For Wife and Mother. For Daughter and Maid.

HOME ENTERTAINMENT.

Arranging the Bridge Table.

[New York Evening Telegram:] Women are invariably in the majority at bridge at homes, and the hostess usually arranges, when this is so, that three women and one man should form the party at each table. Those who are unacquainted with each other she makes a point of introducing in a direct manner. Perhaps she will say: "Mrs. Blank, I think you know Mr. Dash?" and if a smiling negative is given, she will laughingly remark: "Well, you know him now; he is going to play at your table." This gives Mrs. Blank an opening for saying something relative to his play or her play, and gives her no excuse for bowing slightly and saying nothing, as was not infrequently the response to introductions in general when made at ordinary at homes, for no obvious reasons. The same kind of introduction with slight variations, does duty at these bridge afternoons. The women are introduced to each other who are to play together. They expect it as a matter of course, and they enter briskly into the spirit of the times.

To Regulate the Points.

The points to be played are regulated by the players at each table—that is to say, by the feminine players. They decide how much there shall be on the rubber, and if the man at their table protests against it being too low, according to his ideas—though he seldom will be so rude—he is not allowed to have his way, and they wisely keep to their own decision.

CULT OF THE LAMP.

Old Ivory Effect for Drawing-Room.

[Cleveland Plain Dealer:] The craze for softly-lighted living-rooms has brought about "The Cult of the Lamp." The lamp must be selected with care and with an eye to its effect in whichever room it is to have place. One suited to a drawing-room furnished in old mahogany and brocaded damask, is of porcelain of old ivory finish and has a dome-shaped shade of glass tinted in sunset effects. For a first empire room is a French lamp of deeply wrought brass equipped with a pine cone topped shade of delicate rose silk with brass trimmings. Of similar character is a brass lamp with a shade of opaque glass overlaid with brass filligree work, another of green finished bronze with a green opaque shade inlaid with an attractive pattern in colors, and a third is of hand-wrought copper and bronze with a bronze-hued glass shade.

Delicate Boudoir Lamp.

Boudoir lamps are charming affairs of hammered silver, bronze, brass or copper with delicately tinted shades which may be tilted to any angle desired for reading or writing. And for the dinner table are glass lamps holding, instead of oil, low flat candles, reputed to burn steadily for three hours. They are shaded with flowered or plain silk parasols fringed with beads.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

[Baltimore American:] To Soften Boots and Shoes.—Rub your shoes and boots well with castor oil and let them stand for twelve hours. This will keep them from cracking and make them yielding and soft.

Ink Spots on Fingers.—Ink is removed from the fingers in a very simple manner. Wet the finger and then rub the phosphorous end of a match on the spot. Wipe the fingers and renew the action until the spot has disappeared, in a minute or two.

Cooling Beds in Summer Time.—A piece of Chinese matting slipped between the sheet and mattress will be found to be decidedly cooling. A hot-water bottle filled with ice water laid under the pillow will have the same effect.

Cure for Toothache.—Heat two tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Dip a little absorbent cotton in the hot vinegar and apply it to the gum at the root of the aching tooth.

Removing Starch From Irons.—Should starch cling to your iron while using it sprinkle some salt on a piece of brown paper and run the iron on it.

Releasing Ice Cream or Jelly from Molds.—Fold a hot cloth around the mold and jelly or ices will leave the mold without sticking.

WARNINGS ABOUT ICE.

Be Sure It is Sanitary.

[The Companion:] The housewife who wishes to protect her family will never cool the drinking water by putting ice into it, unless she knows that the ice is made artificially from distilled water in a sanitary plant, or is taken from an unpolluted source. If her iceman fills his houses from ice cut in the vicinity of her home, she should ask the Board of Health or some competent physician whether or not the water of the pond from which it came is free from pollution.

Artificial Ice Safest.

If she lives in some Southern city where the only ice available is either artificial ice, or natural ice that has been shipped hundreds of miles from the North, she will choose the artificial ice, unless she knows absolutely that the natural ice is free from disease-producing bacteria. That she can learn by calling on the Health Officer, who in his laboratories can easily determine whether or not the ice is safe or dangerous.

The safest way, however, is not to put ice into the water, or allow it to come into actual contact with food. Drinking water kept in bottles in the refrigerator will become cold enough for anyone to drink.

KINKS IN THE KITCHEN.

For Beauty and Order.

[Christian Herald:] Now, a word as to the kitchen beautiful: If we spend hours upon hours in this room we have a right to insist that it shall be beautiful. Happily order—that is heaven's first law—is likewise the first law of beauty in the kitchen, and utility the keynote of its wise decoration. So we find that even a row of knives, can openers, strainers and small utensils hung up in orderly and convenient arrangement above the work table may become an ornamental feature of the room. So, too, a well-arranged display of pots and pans conveniently hung near the range, instead of tucked away in a dark closet, is a decorative asset not to be despised. But if we mix indiscriminately together gray agateware and blue, tin, iron and aluminum, the sought-for effect is lost.

The Plate Shelf.

A plate shelf can be made highly decorative if set out with casseroles, platters, jugs and pitchers of one kind or another, providing only that the things are suitable, harmonious in color and not too many of them. A plate shelf that becomes a "catch-all" is infinitely worse than none at all.

Finally no kitchen can be attractive that is ill-lighted; and the color of the walls has almost as much to do with this as the size of the windows. Since a woman can, as a last resort, paint the walls herself—adding perhaps a pretty stencil border—there is no good excuse for having them other than cheerful and bright. It is not necessary to be an artist; directions given in the booklets published by our best paint houses are simple and the cost small.

FROM THE SHOPS.

A Delicious Perfume.

[New York Tribune:] Another delicious perfume which adds novelty to its charm clearly shows the Russian influence. The vogue for all that is eastern is so strong at this time that it is not surprising to find it has extended to perfumes, especially when it is remembered that the Russian women are exceedingly fond of sweet odors. As a rule, however, the Russian extracts are very heavy, with a suggestion of musk, which is used so freely in the east, but this new extract is quite free from it, and is delightfully delicate and appealing.

It is encased, as one would expect, in such a chef d'oeuvre in the art of perfumery, in a triangular leather case. The bottle, of clearest crystal, is likewise triangular in shape, with an attractive cut-glass stopper.

Bassinette on Wheels.

A bassinette on wheels is by far the most convenient sort to handle. The wheels are small, round blocks of wood, and the basket can be removed from the frame which the wheels support. Such a bassinette, trimmed with point d'esprit and ribbon, sells for $30.

IN THE GARDEN.

The Sweet Herb Bed.

[Pittsburgh Gazette:] If you have a few feet of available space somewhere near the kitchen door, try having a sweet herb bed. It will afford much pleasure to you while you are planning, planting and caring for it, and its products will be of real worth. They can be used not only when they are fresh, but they can be dried for winter use.

The bed should, of course, contain plenty of parsley. Sweet basil, sweet marjoram, sage, summer savory and thyme should also be planted. A mint plant will yield enough leaves to furnish mint sauce for lamb all summer long—two plants will answer this purpose anywhere. Catnip can be grown, if you have a cat, and dill will be found useful, too.

About Parsley.

Parsley should be set out early. Seeds of the finest quality can be bought for 10 cents a package. They are slow to germinate, and so should be soaked for twenty-four hours in lukewarm water, then dried on a blotter until they can be handled and then planted. The soil in which they are planted should be rich and finely pulverized—as, indeed, should be the soil of the whole bed.

The parsley should be sown in drills a foot apart and not more than an inch deep. It should be covered, and if the soil is of light, sandy texture it should be well pressed down over the seeds with a board. If the soil is heavy and of claylike quality it need not be pressed down. The seeds should be kept moist. They may not germinate for four weeks, but when they do come up they will grow rapidly and sturdily.

LITTLE HOME ECONOMIES.

Make Peanut Butter Last.

[Contributors Today's:] I think that many users of peanut butter do not know that it is greatly improved by being mixed with a small quantity of water. Put the peanut butter into a bowl, add the water half a teaspoonful at a time and mix thoroughly until it is light and creamy and of the proper consistency. Peanut butter prepared in this way is extremely delicate and is economical, as the original quantity is increased. Mix only enough for one meal, as it does not keep as well as the unmixed butter.

Drippings Instead of Butter.

Instead of using butter in my poultry dressing I take the fat left after frying sausages. When we have sausage for Sunday morning breakfast, I leave the fat right in the pan; then after breakfast I reheat it, remove the pan from the fire and add bread which has been sliced, dipped in cool water and squeezed almost dry. I season this according to my rule for poultry stuffing and use it for stuffing the Sunday fowl. We like the flavor of the sausage and think the dressing better than when butter is used. Do not use more than one cupful of the fat with the amount of dressing sufficient for a large fowl.

HEARTSEASE.

Work By the Hands.

There must be work done by the hands or none of us would live, and work done by the brains or the life would not be worth having, and the same men cannot do both.—[Ruskin.

To the Crying Dreamer.

If you're tired of planning and toiling
In the crowded hives of men;
Heart-weary of building and spoiling,
And spoiling and building again,
Go back to the dear old river,
Where you dreamed your youth away;
But dream not there forever—
Come back at the close of day.

If you're sick of the showy seeming
Of a life that is half a lie;
Of the faces lined with scheming
In the throng that hurries by,
From your sleepless thoughts' endeavor
Go out where the children play;
And then return to the city
And try it for one more day.

If you feel no pride, but pity
For the burden the rich endure;
If nothing seems sweet in the city
But the patient lives of the poor,
Go out into God's hill-spaces,
To the woods that the dreamer needs;
But come back, you coward, to the city,
Ready for friendly deeds.

No, no! in the street's rude hustle,
With trophies of mart and stage,
There is need for the hopeful story
Of the meadow's kindly page.
Thank God you can dream by a river,
But do not dream alway;
Bring your visions back to the workers
Who never have learned to play!

THE VITAL NERVE
and without asking, is awarded a DOCTOR'S DIPLOMA of HONOR BY STATE OF NEW JERSEY CHIROPRACTOR'S ASSOCIATION. This greatest discovery of the century shows that "Good health is good circulation only," and nothing more is required in any sickness or supposed incurable disease. Consumption, Typhoid Fever, Paralysis, Heart Disease and other "bugbears" vanish like a dream. (All can do it.) Everybody, without cost, can reach the Electric Center of their own body without a moment's delay and obtain relief from the numerous ills of life, as recorded of the age of mystery, but grossly withheld for speculation by the most civilized nations.
Mr. Rogers finds this ancient practice to be strictly natural and used daily by California Indians, also by the sturdy Japs, who are models of health and the women strong like men. The Times Printing Co. has printed the full method with free trial in 16-page booklet, which will be sent free to all who are interested in the subject of health. Read the wonderbook. REAL PROSPERITY.

SIGNS OF prosperity have been looming up for some time above the horizon of business. Now this desirable condition is right here with us and will improve as the weeks go by.

From the northern lumber mills come reports of noticeable improvements in that line of trade by rail going inward and by ships going outward. Many of the mills which were shut down are operating. Cargo shipments from Gray's Harbor for the last month are the largest since the war broke out, forty-one vessels sailing with cargoes totaling 31,470,200 feet. This shows that the building in every way is picking up all through the country.

A week ago in Los Angeles the sale of the Rex Arms, an immense apartment-house on Orange street, just west of Figueroa, at $600,000, half of it paid in cash, seemed quite like old times.

Simultaneously appeared the news that O. T. Johnson, a local capitalist of heavy means, was preparing to build an immense apartment-house in the Crown Hill section between Sixth street and Crown Hill avenue.

These are two large transactions flanked by very numerous smaller ones, many of them of considerable importance. In the country, sales of farm and orchard property are moving with increased speed and in increased size of transactions.

Only What Every One Knows.

IN LOS ANGELES recently Dr. Charles F. Marvin, chief of the United States Weather Bureau, expressed his opinion quite elaborately on the influence of climate upon humanity physically and intellectually. He might have added artistically and spiritually. Incidentally the doctor gave the highest prize for climate to Southern California.

Of course climate influences humanity in every one of its elements. It influences vegetable growth, and why not animal growth of all kinds? Of course much depends upon the variety of vegetable or animal brought under the influence of the climate. With scrub progenitors, in time climate may make higher types out of them, but it will take generations to do it.

This is not a guess; it is proved every day in the world by concrete facts. A dispatch arrived from San Mateo the other day saying that St. Matthew's Military Academy in the Burlingame hills was to be discontinued after forty-nine years of successful operation. The writer has known this institution for all these years, as he first came to California to assist the founder in conducting that school. In the two generations that have grown up there there have been a great many young men who distinguished themselves in later life. They distinguished themselves in business, in intellectual pursuits and in athletics. William T. Reid, Harvard's famous football coach, was a California boy, graduated from this school. So was Harry F. Brooks of Yale, with the world's record as a sprinter. And Pete Kaars Burg, regarded as the University of California's greatest full-back. Among intellectuals who were graduated from St. Matthew's school is Lincoln Steffens, about whose intellectual activity and brightness there can be no doubt, whatever may be said of his other characteristics.

The Harbor's Usefulness.

THE LOS ANGELES harbor is very rapidly becoming remarkable among the seaports of the world for its commercial activity. The other day when the Iowan of the American-Hawaiian line touched there she carried out 8000 tons of merchandise, part of it from northern ports but much of it loaded here. On a later date the Kroonland sailed from New York for Pacific Coast harbors, among them Los Angeles, with 14,000 tons of merchandise aboard and her capacity of passengers.

The general agents of the Pacific Navigation Company are busy providing for commerce between our harbor and those of Mexico on the West Coast. The people down in those Mexican cities are in great straits for everything, including their "daily bread." The wharves at Mazatlan and other Mexican ports are said to be creaking under the loads of merchandise waiting to be shipped out. The California-Mexican Steamship Company at Long Beach is planning to have built at the home port two steamers which will cost $100,000 each, for use between the port and Mexico.

It Sounds Like Old Times.

THAT THERE is great activity in country property cannot be doubted for a moment. The Erkenbrecher Syndicate has just sold the Sharon Farms in the San Joaquin Valley to a pair of San Francisco capitalists. The tract consists of 4160 acres lying around the town of Sharon, and the price is given at $400,000.

Another Madera county transfer was of 3800 acres lying seventeen miles north of Fresno, which were sold for $150,000. The tract went to a couple of Salt Lake operators, and was put through by Charles P. Halfhill and Harry C. Cook, the latter with William M. Garland and Company.

Four Thousand a Day.

ON SATURDAY, May 22, the inbound travel at the city of Los Angeles numbered 4000 souls coming from the East in regular and extra trains. This was a record for the time, and indicates the great trend of travel to the Coast, undoubtedly brought largely by the two great expositions now open and impelled westward by the danger of crossing the Atlantic for European tourists.

Game of Get-together.

AT REDONDO BEACH a week ago a knot of hot wires interested in the prosperity of that locality gathered after a million-dollar banquet held under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce of that place. The topic of discussion was the consolidation of Redondo Beach, Hermosa Beach and Manhattan Beach. These three charming seaside resorts lie so close together that their interests are about one. Behind this getting-together programme, probably lies the ambitious idea originated by the energetic people of Redondo Beach to construct a harbor at that place.

Southern California Ideals.

TALK ABOUT climate and its influence on humanity and humanity's way of living, and what do you think of the project of Ellen Beach Yaw, known all over the Coast as Lark Ellen, to found a school for vocal culture out on Baldwin Heights, in the heart of the San Gabriel Valley? This sweet singer has been a resident of Covina for many years, and it is reported that she has secured a liberal plot of land on Baldwin Heights near the Puente Hills on which she will have a temple devoted to the musical cultivation of the girls of the country. The idea is typical of Southern California, for this home will consist of a group of bungalows with a community dining-room for the girls who go there for musical instruction under this experienced and able teacher. At the end of the grounds the plan is to have a small Greek theater to be used for concerts. The site lies on a knoll overlooking the valley on one side, and on the other the Puente Hills right in sight. The whole thing is a peculiar California idea, and especially the Greek theater, in which concerts will be held in the open air at all seasons of the year.

Misfortune to Baby Town.

OWENSMOUTH, in the San Fernando Valley, is only about a year old. It may seem like aping the fashions of grown-ups that in such a baby a serious fire should occur. It is more serious than the value of the property destroyed would indicate, only $15,000, for it is the city waterworks that were lost. The people of this new town are pioneers and know the game of pioneering. It will not take many days to restore the destroyed waterworks.

An Important Highway Link.

THE NEW bridge across the Colorado River near Yuma is a real dandy with a jim to it. The total cost is $76,000. The significance of this is that it forms an important link in the overland highway which in the future will be traversed by thousands of automobiles every year, carrying tourists westward and back home again. It will be difficult, indeed impossible, to imagine anything more exhilarating and inspiring than a trip across the continent in an automobile. America is about 3000 miles from sea to sea, and in that extent lie the richest valleys, the broadest plains, the grandest mountains, the most lordly streams, and many of the most modern and magnificent cities of the world. For the greater part of the year this route will be practicable, and it will be easy to come the whole distance across the continent, traveling only by day, seeing everything on the route and resting at night. It will be easy to make twenty miles an hour for ten hours, or 200 miles a day. Our programme may be a little strenuous, but the beauty of this trip will be that it will be like Shakespeare's definition of mercy, no strain or restraint about it. It will be a thorough go-as-you-please.

An Inspiring Achievement.

ABOUT FIVE years ago Frank J. Hart, president of the Southern California Music Company, found his health so impaired that he had to seek rest from business and life in the open air. He went the right way about it and has succeeded. As he looked about he saw a tract of rough brush land on the southern slope of the Sierra Madre range of mountains just above the town of Sierra Madre. It consisted of thirty-four acres, and was a mixture of desert and jungle that would not have looked inspiring to anyone who had not the eyes of an artist. The tract cost him a bagatelle, but he now values it at $500,000, and undoubtedly could get this from any one of a great many American millionaires. Horticulturists and gardeners laughed at this invalid when he went to work to beautify the tract of land so uninviting to the eyes of most people. He has ransacked the earth for vegetable growth to beautify his piece of hill land. Instead of looking like a mixture of desert and brushy wilderness he has now a garden unique and beautiful, and to use a hackneyed phrase, it is admired of all admirers. Mr. Hart has set an example, or has blazed out a path as a pioneer, which many can follow with similar results. In the time that is coming upon us our mountains will contain a great many similar bits of Paradise. It is only five years since Mr. Hart went at this, and it astonishes all who behold it.

To Eliminate Grade Crossings.

LOS ANGELES is a city of more than half a million people, to become before the end of the first quarter of the century a city of double that size. It is a city, too, of magnificent distances, and to accommodate this vast population living in such a wide extent of territory there has been developed here one of the most complete street-railroad systems in the world, and one managed most admirably. All the beaten paths of the world, moreover, by land and sea, lead to Los Angeles, the city of heart's desire for all the world. Three continental railroad systems enter the city, which, because of their branches, equal six trunk lines anywhere else than here. Moreover the country around is served by a multitude of branch lines, and then there is the adjunct of the Los Angeles Railway Company which operates the street lines, the Pacific Electric operating the interurban lines. A map of these railroad lines would not be like the wheel of a wagon but like a spider's web, so thick would the lines run and so many would be the crossings.

Where these local lines cross the transcontinental lines, indeed everywhere where the electric cars cross the steam cars on grade, which is at every crossing in the city, the dangers of collision are very great. Two excellent propositions are before the people now to eliminate these grade crossings at least at two points. One of these is a viaduct across the river at Seventh street and another contemplates a really elevated railroad from the Plaza to Brooklyn Heights. The latter is estimated to cost a million dollars.

The eastern section of the city, across the river, known as Boyle Heights and Brooklyn Heights, is really one of the most picturesque and salubrious residence portions of the city. But the means of reaching this section of the city from the business center, in spite of the excellent street-railroad system we have, are not at all adequate, owing to the dangerous grade crossings at almost every point on the river. At First street, one of the principal thoroughfares between the business center and Boyle Heights, the street-car tracks are carried on a viaduct above the steam railroads. With a viaduct across the river at Seventh street and the elevated railroad from the Plaza to Brooklyn Heights the transportation of the population to the east side would be very much facilitated.

Lindsay and Around.

THE LINDSAY GAZETTE gives an interesting synopsis of what is going on around that bustling city in the San Joaquin Valley, in the eastern part of Tulare county. The city boasts the largest orange-packing house in the world, with a capacity of twenty-two carloads a day. It is claimed that during the present season more oranges were shipped from that point than from any other single place in the State—more by 500 carloads. In one day there were shipped 103 carloads from Lindsay, or two immense trains. About half the entire crop from the north of the Tehachepi goes out of that city. It has thirteen packing-houses, and is planning to have several new ones built.

In the foothill lands from Strathmore to Exeter in the same district as Lindsay, plans are being laid to form a new irrigation district of 14,000 acres. This is all foothill land, excellent for oranges or any other kind of cultivation. The proposition is to take the overflow from the Kaweah River and pump it up to the lands. It is estimated that it will cost $80 an acre, and the proposition is to issue bonds in the sum of $1,180,000.

Southland Crop Prospects.

FROM EVERY portion of Southern California the reports on the growing crops are more than satisfactory, promising immense results. The first strawberry crop is about ended, and on account of the abundant rains was a record-breaker, both for quantity and quality. By the crate the berries were sold, large, red, luscious ones, and three cents a box. From San Jacinto the report is that the hay and grain crop of the valley will be a bumper, the apricot and peach trees are loaded down, and that the olive crop will be above the average. It will take thousands of hands to harvest these crops in this one valley alone, and looking at California as a whole there will be work for every willing and able man in the State from now for many weeks to come.

The beet crop now in the ground is doing excellently, and covers more than the average acreage. The walnut crop is also in most satisfactory and promising condition. In fact, all over California every crop is promising excellently, which means that there is a foundation for great prosperity growing out of the ground at this moment.

The Kaiser's Handwriting.

The favored few with whom the German Emperor deigns to correspond find his writing almost, and sometimes wholly, undecipherable. The Kaiser's is what is known in boys' schools as "large hand," and the letters are formed nearly perpendicularly.

Since his memorable visits to England in 1891 and 1907, says the London Standard, many of his missives have found their way to London, to Lowther Castle, and to other parts of the country. That the Emperor has a remarkable command of our language was seen by his long letter to the late Lord Tweedmouth, which was recently made public. It contained only a very few minor faults in spelling and in the construction of sentences.

The Servians Sing This.

[St. Joseph News-Press:] The Servian soldiers' marching songs are composed by the men of the ranks on the Homeric rather than the modern variety hall plan. A Servian officer has rendered into English one of the most popular songs, a song of exultation over victory, as follows:

"The Swabos came right up to Ralya,
But no farther, tra, la lalya.
  Hey, how was that?
  Yoy, why was that?
Rashko Pol they won't forget,
For the Servians they met.
  Hey, how was that?
  Yoy, why was that?
Now they know, the Swabo bruders,
How the Serb receives intruders!
  Hey, this is why,
  Yoy, this is how!"

The Human Body—Its Care, Use and Abuse.

ANNOUNCEMENT has just been made, in a standard publication, that a cure for cancer has at last been discovered. The announcement is made by Dr. S. P. Beebe, professor of experimental therapeutics at Cornell University Medical College, and gives promise that an epoch-marking discovery—perhaps the most important since the discovery of anesthesia three-quarters of a century ago—has been made; and that the most frightful and loathsome menace to middle-aged and elderly people has finally succumbed to science.

Most of us will be inclined to regard the announcement of this discovery with justifiable skepticism. The memory of the much-heralded curative effects of radium is still fresh. But in justic to the radium enthusiasts, it should be said that their official statements were most conservative; and, furthermore, that radium does act beneficially in certain types of cancers. Moreover, the reputation of Prof. Beebe as a careful observer, and the character of his associates, is a guarantee that something quite out of the ordinary has been accomplished, something has stood the test of close, practical scrutiny before the announcement was made

How the Remedy is Applied.

The discoverer of the remedy is Alexander Horovitz, Ph.D., an Austrian chemist and biologist, who carried on the preliminary studies in his own country. His later experiments have been made in this country under the direction of Dr. Beebe and Dr. J. Wallace Beveridge. And it was under their direction that the method of applying the remedy was perfected.

This method consists simply in the hypodermic injection of the remedy, in practically the same manner that serums and antitoxins are administered. But curiously enough this cancer remedy is neither serum nor antitoxin, simply the extracts of twelve different plants, most of them more or less familiar to physicians. Yet this extract has produced results in a series of inoperable and incurable cases of cancer, including the types known as carcinoma and sarcoma, which have never been accomplished heretofore. Such cases as malignant sarcoma due to the removal of the kidney, recurrent carcinoma of the breast, and other malignant growths quite beyond the range of surgery have yielded to treatments lasting only a few weeks and are apparently entirely and permanently cured.

In some cases the cure is hastened by local applications of the remedy in connection with the hypodermic administration. Indeed, this was the method of treatment originally applied by the discoverer. Dr. Horovitz. But obviously the cancers located in inaccessible places could not be reached in this manner. It was not until Dr. Horovitz had demonstrated the effects of his remedy by local applications to external cancers, however, that Drs. Beebe and Beveridge developed the hypodermic method of administration, which not only reaches the most remote growths, but acts more certainly upon the local cancers.

Dr. Horovitz's Early Methods.

"As administered by Dr. Horovitz," says Dr. Beebe in his official report in the N. Y. Medical Journal, "the treatment consisted of the repeated application of a poultice to the affected parts and the administration internally in the form of an extract, either as a liquid or as a pill, of certain substances contained in the poultice itself. The application of the poultice was followed by an intense reddening of the skin and, if the application was prolonged in the beginning of the treatment, blistering might be produced. It had the effect of active counter irritation. However, the effect went farther than this. The malignant mass in many cases gradually became edematous, softer than before, . . . and if the skin was broken there was a profuse serous discharge. . . . There was at the same time an inmprovement in the general condition of the patient, evidenced by the relief from pain, increase in appetite, and a marked improvement in the toxemia or cachexia accompanying the disease."

It was this series of striking, and obviously beneficial effects of the remedy which attracted the serious attention of Drs. Beebe and Beveridge.

Making the Remedy Available.

The fact that Dr. Beebe has published the results of his work together with a full description of the method of employing the remedy without reservation, is an earnest that sufferers from cancer will be given the full benefit of the new treatment. Indeed, it is announced unofficially that a well known philanthropist is so impressed with the results obtained, that, through his cooperation, the leading hospitals throughout the country will be kept supplied with the remedy for free treatment of those unable to pay.

This arrangement will protect the public against the alleged "cures" that are sure to flood the market, with the usual claims of potency, and for the sole purpose of fattening some individual's pocket at the expense of other persons' suffering. With the plan of free treatment in reputable hospitals in operation, however, there will be little excuse for deception by charlatanism.

It is too soon to attempt to estimate what the new treatment may mean to the world; but the conservative statement made in Dr. Beebe's report indicates the need and possibilities of the remedy. "Approximately 75,000 persons died in the United States during the last twelve months from this disease (cancer)," he says, in referring to the older methods of treatment. "While there are no available statistics, I believe it is a conservative estimate to state that, with our present methods of treatment, at least 80 per cent. of all persons in who develop malignant tumors, ultimately reach the inoperable, incurable stage." I is this 80 per cent., or 60,000 persons, that it is hoped the new remedy will save annually.

Tobacco and Heart Disease.

There are 400,000 deaths from heart disease in the United States annually. The amount of tobacco used in this country is increasing steadily. What, if any, is the connection between these two important facts?

If we may judge from the very latest investigations, the part played by tobacco in producing organic heart disease is insignificant. "If experimentation, pharmacology and clinical observation have taught one single fact about the action of tobacco," says Prof. Brooks, of New York, "it is that its effects, while occasionally very dangerous, are evanescent."

This does not mean that certain conditions are not made worse by tobacco, but simply that very few organic conditions dangerous to life are actually produced by it. Moreover, there is a growing belief that tobacco, when used in reasonable quantities, does not produce many of the dangerous symptoms in organic heart conditions that were formerly attributed to it. But in angina pectoris, the dangerous, and usually fatal, disease involving the heart arteries, which causes excruciating pain in the cardiac region and in the left shoulder and arm—in this condition tobacco is distinctly harmful, even in small amounts.

It is true that a condition which stimulates angina in the location, and character of the pain is produced by the abuse of tobacco. But this tobacco angina is not an organic, or a dangerous condition, and is promptly relieved by discontinuance. True angina is made worse by tobacco, but is not relieved by discontinuing it.

Excessive use of tobacco, in any form, is undoubtedly harmful, particularly to certain sensitized individuals. But there is no evidence to show that it actually produces organic diseases. Otherwise we should be a race of short-lived invalids. In point of fact, the average span of life seems to be increasing, despite the increased use of tobacco.

New Treatment of Angina.

True angina accompanies the condition of hardened arteries called arteriosclerosis, is probably the result of hardening of the arteries of the heart itself, and, as was said a moment ago, has hitherto been considered practically incurable. Recently, however, electricity in the special form known as the high frequency current, has been found to give great relief, and may even be curative in certain cases.

The method employed requires expert application, but is nevertheless relatively simple. The high frequency current is applied with a glass vacuum electrode to the front and back of the chest for abost five minutes each. The current used is strong enough to redden the skin slightly toward the end of the treatment, but currents of this strength cause no pain or discomfort. The treatments are given twice a week, and although they may give relief after a few applications, they must be continued for several months to produce curative effects.

During the high frequency applications no other form of treatment is administered. And it has been demonstrated, in some instances at least, that there is a general improvement in the arteriosclerotic condition of all the arteries, as well as in the ones directly responsible for the angina.

Time for Work, Play and Sleep.

A good division of time for the average person is six to eight hours' work, four hours of rest, meals included; three of pleasure of a kind which employs faculties that were not used during work; and eight to nine hours of sleep.

The faculties that are active during business hours should be entirely relieved each week for thirty-six hours. This is achieved best by a diversion, the blood being drawn away from those parts to which it habitually flows while engaged in one's usual work. On the other hand, one must be cautious not to tire one's self by the diversion itself. Each year once, or twice, if possible, a vacation of at least twelve days should be taken. Ten days are necessary to remove from the brain centers the rhythm that has been accepted automatically through an ever-repeated kind of activity. This so-called "perserverism" is over, in a healthy person, at the latest on the eleventh day, when the brain is ready to work with renewed energy.—[The Heart and Bloodvessels.

Nourishment and Growth.

One naturally supposes offhand that any food that is thoroughly nourishing will also be productive of growth in young animals, and children. But recent experiments indicate that unless there are certain growth-producting elements in foods, body growth will not take place, even though the body itself is perfectly nourished.

For example, it is possible to stop the growth of half-grown rats, meanwhile keeping them perfectly nourished, by feeding them abundantly with starch, lard and milk from which the cream had been removed. This process of stopping the growth is in no wise conparable to stunting by underfeeding, as these animals are given all the food of this special kind they wish. Moreover, when whole milk is substituted for creamless milk, or if a small amount of unsalted butter is given, the rats begin to grow immediately. It appears, therefore, that in this instance, butter is the element necessary to growth, although not necessary to nutrition. And this experiment suggests that the growth-elements in food, and the nutrition elements, may be quite different, although both are necessary to perfect development.

Rat Catcher Becomes Affluent.

[Houston Post:] Charles Bertolina, the Galveston Pied Piper, has turned in his badge and will not be seen catching rats along the water front and the beach for some time. Charles is the champion rat catcher of Galveston. For the past several months he has been taking the rodents at the rate of 2000 per month.

For this service he received the regular price paid for rats and in addition was given a bonus of $10 provided he caught as many as 1000 in thirty days.

When Charles began his career as rat catcher he said he would quit when he had made enough money to buy a boat and a gasoline engine. Recently he made the purchase and then appeared at the health office and laid down his commission.

The latest record made by Charles was 1028 rats in sixteen days. For these he was paid at the rate of 8 and 10 cents each and given a bonus of $10.

On the Mighty Parana River.

A Vast Basin.

FUTURE MEAT BASKET OF EUROPE AND THE UNITED STATES.

THE WONDERS OF RIO DE LA PLATA—MAKES THE GANGES LOOK PUNY—THE PARANA AND ITS TEN THOUSAND ISLANDS—TRANSPORTATION CONTROLLED BY A MONOPOLY. HOW A CABIN BOY MADE MILLIONS—MEALS ON A SOUTH AMERICAN RIVER STEAMER.

From Our Own Correspondent.

FOR the past five days I have been steaming up the Parana River, and I am now on the steamship San Martin, on the great Paraguay, which is a branch of the Parana. On one side of me is the republic of Paraguay, and on the other the Chaco, which belongs partly to Paraguay and partly to Argentina. I am in the heart of the Parana Basin, which is potentially one of the world's greatest meat baskets of the future. It has already supplied vast quantities of beef and mutton for the warring armies of Europe, and it is also shipping meat northward for Uncle Sam's stomach.

As I left Buenos Aires I saw one of the Lamport & Holt steamers loaded with chilled beef starting out for New York, and, sailing up the Rio de la Plata, I passed the mouth of the Uruguay River, that carries down the cattle of Uruguay and the Argentine Mesopotamia to Buenos Aires and Montevideo. The next morning we anchored in front of Rosario, on the Parana, several hundred miles from the ocean. There the vessels were taking on Indian corn for the horses of the armies now fighting in France, and all the way up the Parana proper, a distance as great as from New York to Chicago, I passed estancia after estancia upon which thousands of beeves were fattening on the rich grass. In some places I saw droves of horses similar to the hundreds which are now going by shiploads to Europe and flocks of sheep which will soon be frozen mutton in the frigerificos of Buenos Aires. At Corrientes I was near where the Alto-Parana flows into the main stream, and a little later on entered the Paraguay, which extends from here more than 1500 miles northward, opening up another vast meat supply.

The Paraguay River has its source in the highlands of Matto Grosso, the mighty plateau that forms the height of land of the South American continent. The region corresponds to the great lakes region of North America, and it is covered with pastures. The Paraguay flows through grass lands and forests for a distance as great as from Philadelphia to the Rockies. Not far north from where I am now is the mouth of the Pilcomayo River, that rises in the Andes and passes through the cattle lands of Eastern Bolivia, flowing in a tortuous course of 1500 miles through unexplored wilds before it comes into the Paraguay. The Pilcomayo flows between the Chaco of Argentina and Paraguay, countries that have pasture lands scattered here and there through them. The pastures are now being stocked, and they will add greatly to the meat supply of the world.

Vast Rivers.

The country opened up by the streams I have described is so vast that I despair of giving an adequate idea of it. The system of rivers is immense beyond conception. I traveled four days and four nights on the Rio de la Plata and Parana in coming from the ocean to the mouth of the Paraguay. The Rio de la Plata where it empties into the ocean is a vast estuary, 186 miles wide and it is fully that long to the point where the Uruguay and Paraguay join. The Parana proper to where it is formed by the Alto-Parana and the Paraguay is 800 miles long, and it is from ten to eighteen miles wide throughout that whole length. If you will imagine a stream on the average about fourteen miles wide running from Philadelphia almost to Chicago, you may have some idea of the Parana proper. Both the Parana proper and the Rio de la Plata are more like inland seas of liquid mud than like rivers. I took a bath one morning on a steamer in the Rio de la Plata, just before coming into the port of Montevideo. The river there is sixty-five miles in width and it is the color of pea soup. As I stood in the tub I opened the spigot and let the water run out. In a short time I was standing in mud, and when I stepped out my tracks on the bottom of the porcelain tub were as plain as that which scared Robinson Crusoe on the shores of his desert island. The silt of the Rio de la Plata discolors the Atlantic for ninety-eight miles out at sea. The Parana brings down a quarter of a million tons of mud every day, and it has so filled up the channel near Buenos Aires that that city has had to spend more than $40,000,000 in making the docks and dredgings that enable it to be one of the greatest ports of the world.

The water continues muddy all the way from Buenos Aires to where the Paraguay flows in. There is so much mud that it has built up tens of thousands of islands. The channels through which the steamer goes are everywhere about as wide as the Mississippi proper, but they wind their way in and out among these islands. There are times when you cannot see the mainland at all, and other times when you behold only a hazy line of blue over these low expanses of green, the blue being the highlands of the opposite shore. Now you seem to be far out on a sea of liquid mud, now you are close to the islands, and now near the shore of the mainland. The country is so low that the islands seem to be floating, and in flood times there are really floating islands, consisting of great masses of vegetation that have been torn by the river from the highlands of Brazil and are moving slowly down to the ocean. Jaguars, deer, tapirs and other wild animals are sometimes seen on these floating islands. In some places the banks of the islands are steep. They have been coated and built up by flood after flood, as you can see by the strata which are so plain that they look like the layers in a cake and appear to be sliced down with a knife. Many of the islands are covered at flood times, and then the river goes far out over the mainland. At Rosario, about 200 miles from Buenos Aires, the stream at low water is fifteen miles wide, and in the floods it extends ten miles farther out.

Thousands of Islands.

Many of these islands of the Parana are inhabited. This is especially so of those near Buenos Aires, where hundreds of thousands of acres have been taken up by fruit and vegetable plantations. This region is known as the Tigre. The islands are so close together that they seem one great body of land, separated only by narrow canals. There are villas on many of them, and the place is also a pleasure resort, and one of the gambling hells for the city. Farther upstream many islands are devoted to pastures. You see cattle feeding upon them, and animals are ferried over from the mainland in times of drought. The islands are as fertile as the valley of the Nile. They will raise rice, and it is believed that they might furnish enough of that grain to feed the whole country and give some for export. Altogether, they contain thousands of acres, but they form a very small part of the undeveloped regions of this mighty Parana Basin, which potentially is one of the great food lands of the world.

I know of no place on the globe that compares with the basin of the Parana in its undeveloped possibilities. The other large bread and meat areas of the world are practically all under cultivation. Let me recall some that compare in extent with this region. First, take the great plains of China. They are cut up into garden patches. They are spotted with cities and with countless villages of mud huts, and they support several hundred millions of people. And then, the great plains of the Ganges. They are so overpopulated that less than an acre is allotted to the support of each person. The poverty is so great that some of the people eat opium to keep down their hunger, figuring on the number of bites they may eat for dinner at night to be sure they may have breakfast next morning. The wheat lands of Russia might be improved by good farming, but they are often the scenes of terrible famine. And last, but not least, we have the basin of the Mississippi, which is now so thickly settled that we have to import meat from abroad.

The basin of the Parana is bigger than that of the Mississippi, and it is a question whether it has not more cultivable territory. It is more than 2000 miles long, and in places it reaches from the Andes clear out to the ocean. All the way up the Parana and Paraguay to where I am now, the country is one vast plain. Until I reached the Paraguay River I saw no woods to speak of, and I was told that the plains extended back on both sides for hundreds of miles. With the exception of Uruguay, the plains are the only parts of the basin that have been developed, and they still are on the edge of their beginning. Nevertheless, they raise tens of millions of cattle, scores of millions of sheep, and they are now exporting more wheat and corn than any other part of the globe.

Fertile Soil, Favorable Climate.

This vast basin is in the shape of a horseshoe, with the Parana flowing from the toe down through the center. The Andes and the strip of highlands that crosses Brazil form the back and upper end of the shoe while it is bound on the south by the plains of Patagonia. The most of the basin has been built up by the rivers, and their silt has made it one of the most fertile lands of the globe.

Moreover, the climate is fit for white men. The greater part of the basin is as healthy as any part of the Mississippi Valley, the seasons being those of the Mississippi reversed. We go south in the winter to get warm. These people go north. A greater part of the country is in the temperate zone, and it may be compared to the United States. Paraguay is like Louisiana or Florida and the northern part of Argentina has sugar and cotton plantations. Further south the climate is as temperate as that of our Middle States, and in the far south the winters compare with our semi-desert northwest. Three-fourths of Paraguay, through which I am now steaming, is in the temperate zone. The climate is like that of Southern California and the orange orchards are to be seen everywhere.

I wish I could give you some moving pictures of my ride up the Parana River. The stream is like an island-studded sea moving on slowly down toward the ocean. The channels are so wide that they have waves like the waters of a lake, and the sun

DESTRUCTIVE METHODS.

AGRICULTURAL editors, of a right, express admiration for the efficient quarantine on eastern and foreign nursery stock by our county and State officers. We could hardly be faithful to our rural industries if we did not sustain the work done in this line. The quarantine in operation, however, is very easy to give rise to many cases of gross injustice, the particular form of which is the damage done to shipments of good nursery stock by inspectors at their work. Oftentimes the packages are opened and the packing so loosened that the roots are given an opportunity to dry out and the consignment ruined, even though it were healthy stock and in every way in full compliance with our laws.

Our public officials are not employed for the purpose of destroying property which is in perfect health. There is sufficient loss to the individual, in the burning of infected nursery stock. It is not befitting the high responsibilities of a nursery quarantine officer to become careless of the property of citizens over which he has momentary control.

These thoughts are directed by the experience which a number of prominent citizens have suffered on shipments of nursery stock from Geneva, N. Y. There is a quarantine against the importation of peach trees into California from New York State. In carrying out this quarantine the Los Angeles horticultural officer assumed legal charge of the consignments upon arrival and finding peach trees ignorantly included in the list, stored them away on a dry shelf until the consignees were notified by mail. In one case, the consignee living on rural route No. 11, was addressed to rural route No. 1. In another case the consignee was not addressed for many days after the arrival of the stock. By agreeing to have the peach trees removed and destroyed consignees were finally, after much delay, allowed to have their packages.

But what packages! By the errors and omissions of mail advices and the long wait on the high shelf, live trees of considerable financial value and completely in accord with law were all but destroyed.

Can it be said that the horticultural officer enjoying the confidence of the county officials to look after the interests of the citizens and protection of their industries, is prevented from performing the common and sacred duty of at least watering shipments of live plants and trees before storing them away on shelves or in closets. Could any white man with a soul take a bundle of living trees, just in from a long transcontinental trip, and shelve them, pending mail correspondence, without giving them a good soaking? Is any horticultural officer failing to do this, really fit for his responsibilities?

Is it possible that our State quarantine laws do not provide for the safe and proper handling of all parcels of plants and trees that are necessarily delayed in quarantine investigations? Actually, can it be, that such officers are not responsible for wetting down or even "heeling in" valuable property of the citizens thus exposed to legal delay?

In the main, we have ample service from nurseries in our own State. On occasion the introduction of new varieties by eastern nurserymen, and also the bringing of dormant stock late in the season make it necessary for our planters to bring in outside trees. Every one concurs in the value of a quarantine against infected stock, but this delicate duty should not be done in a butchering manner by men devoid of all sense of their obligations to industry and their fellow men. When an officer of the State or the county takes charge of private property he assumes both a moral and a legal responsibility for its safe keeping.

In the making of a young fruit tree there has been expended much human labor, special skill and infinite care. Its future holds in store untold blessings to hungry and famished children of men. A young tree in transit from nursery to planter is a thing of life and beauty. Horticultural officials impervious to the sentiment of plant and tree life should resign and carry a hod.

How many Times readers have suffered from such carelessness? File a statement of your case by mail with this department. We either need further paragraphs added to the nursery quarantine law or more explicit instructions to the inspectors.

"An American Fruit Farm; its Selection and Management for Profit and Pleasure." This work by Francis Newton Thorpe is a record of a beautiful fruit farm on the southern shore of Lake Erie and is as inspiring and entertaining to Californians as though it were written at Redlands or Vacaville. If you have failed to get hold of the deepest feeling in the making of your orchard this magnificent work will revive the earliest colors of your dream and instructively lead you in to the most accurate methods of thinking and doing on the ranch. We hope the work will be made available in every rural library. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

Home-made Electricity.

In a new work entitled "Electricity for the Farm," by Frederick Irving Anderson, published by The Macmillan Company, New York, every detail of the information that we want upon this subject is given. A one-horse-power water wheel, or gas engine, with a one-quarter kilowatt electric generator is quoted as satisfactorily lighting a farm home. A diminutive plant of this character is somewhat of a toy, but a very practical toy to the housewife who is forced to use kerosene lights. At first glance this work is not so appealing to the average California ranch home because we do not usually enjoy the sight of meadow brooks running power to waste, to which strong reference is made. The work, however, covers the entire field of electric development for the small household, including the operation of gas engine and windmill development. However, we do have the equivalent of "meadow brooks running valuable power to waste." We have the hillside homes far removed from the public-service electric lines to which water is piped to the highest point. At this high point, as we have heretofore urged and hereafter will urge, there should be an artificial lake—not the crude type of irrigation reservoir, but an attractive swimming hole. If you have the pressure in the pipes to create one to five-horse-power while the water is filling your lake, you can supply your wife with electric lights at no cost whatever beyond the installation which is about equal that of the ordinary gas plant. Operation is almost without expense thereafter.

The amount of water you have may be only enough during a greater part of the year for a toy plant, that will keep but a half dozen lights burning in the house or barn at one time. And you may even find it necessary to run and store the water several days to gain enough power to charge a storage battery for the six or eight lights; but, large or small, according to this treatise upon the subject, it is within your hands to secure the modern appliances, now entirely within your means that will relieve your wife and the household of the drudgery of lamps. Whoever has falling water or pressure water in pipes, has at hand the magic power of houselighting, and wherever it falls, or resounds with pressure at the nozzle, there is potential wealth of household happiness going to waste. Looking a little further to the ranch home which is piped under heavy pressure to the reservoir, it is apparent that the water company serving it has much waste water in the winter months. If you could lease the right to have this winter waste water run through the pipes and through your small turbine or Pelton wheel into your reservoir and out your storm water ditch from say November 1 to April you could probably at very small cost for the winter waste water service generate enough electricity for lighting, cooking and heating. There is enough of the winter's high water going to waste to make thousands of hillside and valley homesteads happy ever afterward, as the story books read.

Seriously speaking, science is daily solving problems showing how our resources may be conserved. A transcontinental railway crossing our Bitterroot Mountains by means of electric power is hauled up a 2 per cent. grade by the motors for 200 miles. Coasting down the 2 per cent. grade for 200 miles on the opposite side of the mountains the same motors become generators which pump the power of the coasting weight of the train back into the wires to help a train coming up the other side of the mountains. Verily, we have much power going to waste which will yet be conserved. Modern appliances permit you to get your share if you but study the way.

Passing of Noted Garden Editor.

News of the passing of George P. Hall, first president of the Horticultural Commissioners' Association of this State, will be felt as a personal loss to thousands of rural home owners throughout the Southwest who have been acquainted with him as a garden editor for over a quarter of a century. George P. Hall knew how to make things grow and he had the happy faculty of making other people know also. During the last years of his life he devoted himself to the leadership of the little-landers idea in a San Diego colony, where he helped to teach folks the simple ideas that their best home market for poultry and garden stuff was within their own stomachs. What they grew and ate was subjected to no tribute of political or commercial systems. In that colony he was a hero of the George Washington type, a father to the community, a blessing and a benediction to the cause of independence for the individual upon a small area of land. The work to which he devoted himself during the last ten years of his life is but little understood as yet; but Hall performed his part in the foundation work of a great social movement and at a ripe and happy old age has advanced on "to the thitherward side of the mountain of mist in the valley of Overthere."

San Fernando Roadway Trees Jeopardized.

Now comes the problem of who shall care for important plantings of highway trees in parts of the San Fernando Valley since the territory has been annexed by the city of Los Angeles. We refer particularly to that excellent planting work done on the Chatsworth boulevard recently. The county can no longer administer care to these young trees because they are in city territory and there is grave danger that the city forestry department is in no shape to expand its administration over so large a territory. There should be no red tape about this. The city and county officials in adjusting their distribution of taxes should wink an eye and find a way, inside or outside of legal manuscripts, to provide for the care of such work as this, that it does not be lost to the community. The people want the valley roads bordered with trees. There must be no loss of valuable work already started just because of this kind of a technicality. Think of it! that winding road to the granite crags—the Chatsworth boulevard now lined with living, smiling baby trees—live oaks and pines in danger of dying back to a double border of dead specimens. Yes, think of it. Summer is about here and there is no provision for the care of them.

Now Plant Trees.

With the way cleared for greater development of our beautiful mountain parks in the public Forest Reserve by the opening of new roads by the State, and more firebreaks and trails by the Federal forestry officers, it is time that the work on public nurseries for forest trees should begin. No time can be lost if the Board of Supervisors intend to start this work. It is understood that the Pasadena Board of Trade has taken the subject up and that members of the board look favorably upon the project of the county forestry board starting two nurseries of eucalyptus and several varieties of pine trees. Such trees can be grown at a cost of one-half to 1 cent each. The county can afford to distribute them to every resident who agrees to plant and care for them, especially in the foothill and mountain regions.

Every tree planted acts as an umbrella, and retards the rapid and dangerous movement of flood waters, aside from its asset as a beautifier of the landscape. A full-grown eucalyptus tree catches 20 to 40 per cent. of the rainfall and lets it down slowly into a leaf-mulch soil of great retaining capacity. There are hundreds of thousands of acres of foothills that can in time be covered with trees. The work of doing it will be slow enough. A safe and sensible start should be immediate.

Should there be a mountain fire next summer, would it not be wise for the county to have a nursery of young trees coming on which could be immediately planted over the burned area? If there were no fire, there are plenty of hill residents to accept and plant them, and plenty of areas already burned over in the past which can be wonderfully strengthened on forestry lines.

We have had some lamentable experiences with mountain tree planting because our forest officers have not had the funds to do the work in an effective manner. In addition, they have had to experiment and test varieties and methods of planting on a hundred different lines.

There should be no discouragement among such officials. The industries and the communities of the valley must eventually perish or forest the mountains. The successful results achieved can be handsomely multiplied. It has been ever so.

In our development of California the raisins were first planted at Riverside and the industry later centered at Fresno. In the interim there was much loss and many heartbreaks. So with the planting of forest trees we had to learn the methods of planting and the varieties suited for the various slopes, the various soils and the various elevations.

We shall have trees on the face of the mountains or perish from the face of the earth. An invading army could cut off our Owens River water with one blast of dynamite. The Owens River supply is good for times of peace and an excellent investment, but afforestation of our high hills on private lands and the mountainsides will give us streams and percolation water which no enemy could interfere with.

In the older countries which have had their yesterdays, the importance of forestry is understood. In Southern California we have stream beds now higher than the business centers of many of our most important towns. We have already seen wild waters commencing their deadly work. We have seen the time when every highway and railroad bridge in the county was washed out. These bridges have been rebuilt, but the ruined lands have never been reclaimed.

In the year 1860 France passed a law making it obligatory for the owner of mountains or mountain slopes to reforest them if denuded. In 1862 the law was amended so that the land owner had the right to refuse to plant, but the government then had the right to pay him a fair sum for his land and expel him and plant the trees, so important is it considered for the whole community.

Speaking of these laws, J. J. Jusserand, Ambassador to this country from France, said: "The application of this law is one of my earliest souvenirs. In 1860 I was not old, and I went with my grandfather to see our government-ordered plantation. The government supplied the seed and we had to do all the rest. For years I went to see the small trees, and at first could hardly see them. Now, when I go, the trees can scarcely perceive me, they are so tall. The same careful and methodical policy is being introduced in our colonial dominions. There the difficulties are sometimes very great, because the havoc has been more complete. We are trying now to give back to Southern Tunis its pristine fertility. Most of it is now a sand desert. What it was in Roman times we know by the ruins and the inscriptions. The capital of the South, Suffetula, it was called, consists now of scattered ruins in the midst of absolute desert."

If you want to see the processes that utterly destroy even such a fair land as Southern California, you should go and look at the stream beds of Southern California. Look at the work of Sycamore and Verdugo canyons above happy but forestry-ignorant Glendale. Look at the grounds of the San Gabriel Country Club, and all the widely ripped stream beds from Los Angeles east to the county line. We shall have trees, for we must have trees, and at the best it will be several years before we can catch up and pass the point of denudation that is now going on by residential settlers in the foothills. The fertile lands and happy homes in the valleys can no longer be thus jeopardized.

The month of June is the very latest period that tree planters can begin their nursery work. Is the county going to pass the present opportunity?

On the Mighty Parana River.

By Frank G. Carpenter.

dances over a golden expanse of rising and falling billows.

The channel winds this way and that. Now it runs straight north and south, and now almost east and west. Within the last few years the river has been carefully surveyed and there are now light buoys which mark the route of the steamers. The channel is about twelve feet deep all the way from Buenos Aires to Paraguay, and the volume of the river is next to that of the Amazon among the great streams of the globe. Dr. Elmer Corthell, the well-known American engineer, who assisted Capt. James B. Eads in making the Mississippi jetties and who was engaged on the port works at Buenos Aires, estimates that the annual flow of the Parana is double that of the Ganges, four times that of the Danube and five times that of the Nile. It is 80 per cent. larger than the flow of the Mississippi, and three times as great as the volume of the St. Lawrence. In other words, all of the water that annually pours down over Niagara Falls through the downspout of the great lakes and out to the ocean is only one-third as large as that which flows through the Parana system, this great downspout of the Andes. This system also has greater falls than Niagara, as those of Iguazu Falls are higher than Niagara, and they are twice as wide. I shall write again of them.

The Mihanovitches.

The transportation of the Parana is at its beginning. So far it has been controlled by one man and his family. This is the Mihanovitches, an organization or company which has 300 vessels and employs something like 6000 hands. It has a capital of $13,000,000, and it carries more than four-fifths of the traffic of this great river system. It has vessels not only upon the Rio de la Plata and the Parana, but also upon the Alto-Parana and the Paraguay, as far as Asuncion.

The story of Mihanovitch shows some of the possibilities of fortune-making in South America. The elder Mihanovitch, Nicholas, started life as a cabin boy. He was born in Austria, and when, at the age of 18, he landed in Montevideo he had not a cent nor a friend. He got employment on the vessels of the harbor, and after a time was commanding a small river boat sailing from Buenos Aires. Later on, he began to transport goods from ship to ship in the harbor, and to the ports, and gradually built up a transportation service which today is one of the large ones of the world. When he began he had to buy his coal for cash, five tons at a time. When he died, only a short time ago, his vessels consumed 150,000 tons every year. He left millions and had other large undertakings outside his steamships. He was the founder of the La Blanca meat packing establishment, since bought by the Armours. He also owned several hundred thousand acres of land.

Outside the Mihanovitch line, the traffic of the Parana and Paraguay is largely in the hands of Brazilians, although until the war occurred the Germans were carrying on passenger traffic between Buenos Aires and Montevideo, and they had begun to compete for a share of the interior river transportation. The Lloyd Brazilian line has passenger and freight steamers which leave Montevideo every fifteen days for the north. They go up the Parana and Paraguay as far as Corumba, Brazil, which is five days beyond Asuncion. Another line is the Mercante Argentino line, which has five steamers from Asuncion to Buenos Aires. These vessels are all of low draft. The most of them draw less than ten feet, and those which go beyond Asuncion seldom have more than five feet. The smaller steamers go as far as Cuyaba, the capital of Matto Grosso, 2700 miles from the Atlantic. Think of starting in at New York and going across the North American continent as far as Salt Lake City. That is what steamers starting at Buenos Aires can do in this part of South America. Some of the vessels are large. Ocean steamers can travel inland beyond Rosario and load grain for Europe.

Poor Passenger Service.

It seems to me that there are great openings for good ships on the Parana system. All I have seen have been crowded. The San Martin, on which I am traveling, has been full of passengers all the way to Corrientes, near the mouth of the Paraguay. It belongs to the Mihanovitches; and if it is any index of the other ships of the trust any company of well-managed vessels could easily crowd it out of the waters. The ship is a long, low three-decked sidewheeler with hundreds of cabins and a dining-room at one end of the deck. Its accommodations are filthy. The food is not good, and but little attempt is made for the comfort of the passengers. There are crawling things in my cabin, and the bathrooms and the other sanitary arrangements are such that they would not be tolerated on a European or an American vessel. I am told that the line has other vessels that are newer and better, but I would advise all American tourists to examine personally the steamers of the line before they take passage and see what other lines have to offer. There is now a railroad connection between Buenos Aires and Asuńcion, by which one can make the trip in two days. If the boats were good the ideal way would be to go up by rail and to come back south by steamer, when the current of the river should enable the voyage to be made in three days. The rates on the river are $42 to Asuncion and $33 for return to Buenos Aires. There are reduced rates for the round trip.

I wish I could show you the passengers that travel on these South American steamers. They are of all classes and conditions of men. We have here a dozen nationalities, including Russian colonists, Italian laborers and Jew peddlers. We have Germans on their way north for work, commercial travelers who drop off at the ports to go inland and sell goods, estancieros and their families, who own great farms near the river; a half-dozen priests clad in as many different costumes, Brazilians bound for Matto Grosso, and many Paraguayans en route to Asuncion and beyond. When it is the summer on this side of the world, most of the passenger go north for business or necessity, rather than for pleasure. In the winter the character of the crowd is far different. It then becomes somewhat like our exodus from the North to Florida and other parts of the South. Paraguay is the Florida of Argentina, and there are many fashionable people who go there to get away from the cold. It is, I suppose, much like the crowd of rich aristocrats I saw at Mar del Plata, which compares favorably in manners with the society of any part of the world.

Unique Table Manners.

As to the people we have on this vessel, the majority of them are unspeakably "common." Three-fourths of the men tuck their napkins in at the collar, and the toothpick is universally used between courses. The same fork takes its turn in conveying food from the plate to the mouth; and in fishing olives and cucumbers from the mixed pickle bottle. There are some women who are really expert in getting their food to their lips with their knives. I have been watching the process, and so far not a drop of blood has been drawn. Just opposite me sits a girl of 18, who spears at the olive dish with her wooden toothpick, and thus transfers the fruit to her mouth.

The men smoke cigarettes throughout the meals, and nearly everyone polishes his plate with his napkin. I don't blame them for that. I do that myself. The most of the people have better stomachs than I have, and sometimes I can hardly sit out the meal. For instance, the man who sat beside me at breakfast this morning ate his eggs raw. His first order brought two, which were redolently bad. He made a wry face and sent back for others. When the second order came in he broke the raw eggs one after another into a glass, and then stirred them up with his fork and drank the stuff down.

But let me tell you what we have at our meals. The first breakfast is served as soon as you come out of your cabin. It consists of a cup of black coffee and a hunk of dry bread. There is a plate of butter before you which you may eat or not as you please. The first real meal comes at 11:30. It is called almuerzo; it begins with cold meats, a slice of bologna sausage with green stuff on top. Then follows a soup, after which come the beef and bones that were cooked in the soup. Sometimes the soup has also vegetables and you get these with the beef. The next course is some other meat or chicken cooked Spanish style, and after that a mutton chop or beefsteak with potatoes on the side. The almuerzo usually closes with fruit and black coffee.

Dinner is served at 6:30. It is known as comida. It is much the same as the almuerzo, except that there is an extra course or so and a dessert. A very fair wine is served with these two meals without extra charge. The cooking is not good from an American standpoint. Nevertheless, the passengers seem to be pleased. One of them who sat beside me at dinner today and ate every course asked me if we ever had as good a meal as that in our country. I replied that I thought it likely, but I could see that he did not believe. As for my stenographer, a young American who cannot stand Spanish cooking, when he heard the above he remarked, sotto voce: "As good meals as that in our country! I should like to hit him in the bean."

At My Wife's Wedding. By Ernest Douglas.

THE UNEXPECTED.

LORD BERTRAND PERTHFIELD lounged into the office of the probate judge and nonchalantly asked for a license to wed my wife.

"Would have sent my man, y'know," he said with a bored, condescending air, "but they tell me that a license is not legal unless it's—ah—issued to the bridegroom himself, y'know."

"You've been misinformed," Gray, the clerk, told him. "We'd have issued a license to a third party, all right. Name and address, please."

I cannot recall Lord Bertrand's full name and list of titles, and I had never heard of the English town he claimed as his place of residence.

"All right. Now, who is the lady in the case?"

"Miss Imogene Nettleton, New York City."

It was then that I who had been sitting behind the counter chatting with Gray, leaped to my feet, took two steps toward his lordship, changed my mind and went into the hall for a drink of water. I was still dazed when I returned. Lord Bertrand was pushing two dollars across to the clerk and putting a long envelope into his pocket.

After Perthfield left I stood silent a minute, staring at the door he had slammed behind him. Then I seized my hat and started after, paying no heed to the questions hurled after me by Gray.

Through the frozen streets of Flagstaff I tramped after the man who expected to marry my own wife. He turned in at the door of the Antlers saloon and it was there that I found him, leaning up against the bar and ordering a "Tonto Tickler," Comanche Jack's latest concoction, which was elaborately advertised with whiting on the big mirrors. I ordered the same.

Lord Bertrand slowly turned two cold, fishy, blue eyes upon me, raised his monocle and continued to stare. Some of the stage Englishmen that I have seen must have been copied from Perthfield.

"Oh—ah—by Jove, have you any idea what the stuff it?" he asked. "So strange, these American bars, and they serve so many drinks we never heard of in England, y'know."

"This is an invention of Jack's," I replied briefly. I would not have liked his lordship even if he had not been laying plans to marry my wife.

The bartender set our "ticklers" before us and in a moment we were coughing and spluttering together. Perthfield said something under his breath, set down his glass and walked out. Again I followed.

He made straight for a string of cars sidetracked down in the yards. When I saw him enter one I knew that the Nettleton party had arrived ahead of schedule. I had no need to ask why the private train had been sidetracked there in Arizona. There was a washout to the west and traffic would be tied up till the next day, at least.

My head was in a whirl. My first impulse was to rush into the car, call for Imogene and demand to know what it all meant, but my calmer judgment prevailed and I went to my room at the hotel to think. After wrestling with the problem for half an hour I was no nearer a solution of the mystery than at the first, but had become somewhat more calm. Presenting myself at the door of the Alaric, I sent my card to Miss Nettleton.

If I had ever doubted Imogene, that doubt passed when she squeezed my great paw in her little hand and I saw in her brown eyes that light of true love and perfect trust, and of supreme joy at beholding me, that I have never seen in the eyes of any other woman. Her father followed close behind her, preventing anything more than that squeeze and that look. He was not half so glad to see me as was his daughter.

"Hello, Treadway," he said gruffly, putting out his hand. "Really, this is a surprise. Where did you drop from?"

"Why, don't you know that he is making his fortune mining in Arizona?" Imogene broke in. "He is superintendent and part owner of a copper mine somewhere around here."

"Humph! A mine or hole in the ground?"

"It has safely passed the prospect stage and we are planning to erect a smelter to treat our ore next summer," I answered evenly.

"Oh, I'm so glad!" exclaimed Imogene.

"Well, you'd better bring him in and introduce him to the bunch, Immy. You must be our guest at dinner, Treadway. They tell us that we'll be held till tomorrow in this place."

And though I knew that Nettleton, who did not like me at all, invited me merely out of courtesy, I hastened to accept. Indeed, I knew that he was far from pleased at my appearance on the scene, which was a surprise to him if not to Imogene. The last time I had seen him he had told me, in no uncertain terms, that the man who married his daughter must have some assets besides a diploma from a mining school.

I was conducted into a drawing room where a game of bridge was in progress. There I was introduced to Lord Bertrand Perthfield, who gave me a limp hand without arising and asked:

"Oh—ah—didn't I see you in the village?"

"Yes, at Comanche Jack's place," I answered hastily. I was not anxious to have him remember that he had seen me in the probate court.

"Ah, yes, beastly liquor, wasn't it?"

The other members of the party which President Nettleton of the G. V. & N. Railroad was taking west for a winter tour of California, did not interest me particularly. There were three young women, a pair of ancient dowagers, a clergyman by the name of Blout and a young millionaire patron of the drama named Stannard.

I was wildly impatient for a quiet talk with Imogene and I knew that I had to think up some bold scheme to capture and carry her away from that crowd. So, after the introductions were over, I turned to her and asked:

"Are you still as much interested in archaeology as ever?"

"Why, yes."

"Then you simply mustn't miss seeing the Cliffs, now that you have the opportunity. They are caves fitted up as dwelling places by a prehistoric race and located about four miles northeast of here. We can sleigh out there and back in two hours and secure some interesting relics."

"Oh, I must see them! When shall we start?"

A chorus of protest arose.

"What of the final rehearsal, Immy?" asked one of the young women.

"Bother!" she pouted. "You see, Fred, Mr. Stannard has written a little play—a sketch, he calls it—and on this trip some of us have been learning the parts. We are to have a sort of amateur theatrical performance this evening in the observation car, just to kill time and see how the play goes."

"You simply must not miss this last rehearsal, Immy," Nettleton said positively.

Whereupon Imogene announced firmly that the rehearsal would have to be postponed and told me that she would be ready to accompany me to the cliffs in half an hour.

At the end of that period I called for her with a sleigh I had hired at a livery stable and we were off over the snow. I am afraid that Imogene did not make the best of her opportunity to study the dwellings of the prehistoric Arizonans. There were too

The Dandelion.

A LOVELY WILD FLOWER IN THE EAST BUT A PEST HERE.

"NOW that spring has come, with all her charms, the lovely golden dandelion puts forth his shining face from every sunny bank." Thus sings an eastern garden writer, while the more prosy gardener hails with execrations this "yellow peril" of the lawn.

The dandelion is really a beautiful flower and we could learn to love it did it but confine its peregrinations to the before-mentioned "sunny bank." But in California you may bank on its appropriating the whole garden if owner or care-taker will permit. One California writer advocated the sowing of dandelion seeds in lawns so that the household might gather the leaves for table greens, but the next week he fell into a body of water and was drowned. We make no comment on "retributive justice," etc., but rise to remark that in Southern California the dandelion is a decided pest, persisting in growing in all sorts of places and under widely-varying conditions and for tenacity it rivals the industrious garden ant.

But if we will tolerate the presence of one of the golden discs for a few minutes it will prove a happy subject for a little study of floral structure. This plant belongs to the composites, or the sunflower family. What we call a flower is really a flower head, or a compound flower, each one of which has but a single yellow petal, a pistil, closely surrounded by five pollen-bearing stamens and below and outside of these a ring of soft bristles which occupy the place of calyx, usually composed of green petal-like segments. Outside of the whole flower-head is an involucre in two series of small strap-like green appendages. For every floret or flower there should be an ovary surmounted by a tiny "balloon" which the children often blow away one at a time and thus plant dandelion seeds over all the garden.

Panama-Pacific Horticulture.

THE horticultural phase of the Panama-Pacific Exposition is expected to improve right to the end. All the exterior planting is thriving gloriously and each month becomes more impressive, while it must be evident to visitors that all the interior exhibits are not yet installed.

In Golden Gate Park a special garden is just being planted, for during August the many organizations of plantsmen will convene, and leading California nurserymen are each planting a specified plat of ground. Many national, district and State organizations will hold 1915 annual conventions during August, consuming practically the whole month. The garden of the California Association of Nurserymen will then be at its best.

Keep House Plants Clean.

DUST closes the pores or stomata in the epidermis of foliage just as surely and effectually as it does with the skin of the human body. It is most necessary, if plants are to thrive, that the leaves be kept free from dust and vermin. Both accumulate or multiply rapidly and each day's neglect aggravates the trouble. If house plants receive light on but one or two sides, they should be turned two or three times each week so that the growth may be uniform and symmetrical. Keep the drainage free and the top soil pulverized. If you observe all the precautions you should have fine pot plants.

Confusion of Names.

SOME of the avocado growers wish to have us use the Spanish name of ahuacate in place of the better and more easily pronounced avocado. It is wholly immaterial by what name the tree or fruit is known so long as we succeed in encouraging the more extensive planting for family use and incidentally for garden ornamentation. This department has persistently fought against the outlandish name "alligator pear" and has avocado fairly established for a popular name and it will so remain with the writer and doubtless with the general public. Dealers would do well to push the sale of the trees and allow the public to use that name most euphonious and easiest for the American tongue.

What is Humus?

A CORRESPONDENT wishes to know just what "the humus is that is spoken of in connection with soils."

Humus is that portion of the soil which comes from decay of organic matter, either animal or vegetable, and is present to some extent in all soils containing such matter, depending for amount on the percentage that has completed the process of decay. In speaking of "humus soils" we mean those carrying a considerable amount of well-decayed organic matter, though little real humus may be present. When chemically extracted from the soil all humus the writer has seen looked like grains of gunpowder.

Quassia Spray for Aphis.

IN ALL parts of the world quassia chips are used in combating aphis or plant lice. It is both cheap and harmless and most easily prepared. Boil a pound of quassia chips, strain, and add a half-pound of soft soap or dissolve a like weight of strong laundry soap. Mix well and dilute with water to make ten gallons. If this simple mixture requires too much labor, the market is well stocked with ready-mixed commercial preparations and all are good, for aphis yield quickly to almost any discouraging or destructive treatment.

The Favored Color.

MANY will remember the world-wide popularity attained by the La France rose. Still later the gladiolus America has reigned. The Lawson carnation and a host of other plants might be cited to show how light pinks, especially of "shell-pink" shades, are the most popular. Outside chrysanthemums and a few other flowers the heavier demand is for pink and the market calls for about one-half pink, one-fifth white, with other colors in proportion. Locally the call for sunset and copper tints in roses will supersede, for a time at least, the fad for pinks. Even the gladiolus America will soon pass.

Curious Grafting.

WHEN the California Association of Nurserymen met in San Diego last October one of the local speakers welcomed the delegates as "grafters" and said, in part:

"We have, as you all know, a plant known as the milk-weed and another known as the ice-plant, and also the strawberry-plant. By "grafting" these, you should be able to produce strawberry ice cream at a greatly reduced price. Then, by 'grafting' the service-berry on to the Marguerite, you could provide cheap help to serve the cream. Should business increase to wholesale proportions, you might 'graft' the sea-urchin on the hop and have a lively boy to run errands or drive the wild-sorrel as deliveryman. Having reduced the cost of living, you should then turn your attention to the financial condition of your fellowmen, and by 'grafting' the penny-royal and rich-weed on the American Beauties, you should make the Americans rich. You can provide for posterity by 'grafting' Virginia-creeper on Sweet William and then you could supply the happy couple with egg-plant, butter-cups, bachelor-buttons, lady-slippers, and similar commodities, and if their house-leek, you can supply a virgin's bower. Lastly, you might attempt to 'graft' the sage on the elder, thereby adding wisdom to the age of discretion, and then by 'grafting' the century-plant to these wise elders, you would add length to their lives."

Gladiolus Rust.

A CORRESPONDENT complains that present-year stalks of gladioli show rust very badly, whereas the same stock last year was but little troubled. This trouble is no doubt resident in the bulb, and if the sorts grown are common or inexpensive sorts it will be better to throw them away and get a new lot. Expensive or prized bulbs may be variously treated. Lime, Bordeaux mixture, formaldehyde, or almost any fungicide will prove effective as a dip for bulbs before planting. The writer soaked some choice bulbs for two hours in peroxide and now they are rust-free.

The Value of a Garden.

CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER wrote: "The principal value of a private garden is not understood. It is not to give the possessor vegetables and fruit (that can be better and cheaper done by market-gardeners,) but to teach him patience and philosophy, and the higher virtues—hope deferred, and expectations blighted, leading directly to resignation, and sometimes to alienation. The garden thus becomes a moral agent, a test of character, as it was in the beginning."

New Colors in Freesias.

WE ARE now to have freesias in pink, blue, lavender and yellow shades and in a few years they will be common enough, no doubt. At present they are rare and high in price. It is reported that a Mr. Fisher of San Gabriel, Cal., the originator of the white known as "Purity," is growing the new shades from bulbs imported from Europe. In the writer's garden the Purity freesia lacks the robust constitution and large size in flowers of the old-fashioned sort. If such also proves true of the new shades of color they will not rapidly become popular.

Intelligence of Plants.

OCCASIONALLY a writer bobs up who ascribes to plant life nearly all the attributes claimed for humanity. Recognized scientific authorities are painfully silent on the subject as must be the case with all who have had an intimate life acquaintance with plants, yet plant life reveals many wonders to those who study it closely.

A magazine, whose name we have diplomatically forgotten, contains an article on the "Passions of Plants," in which occurs the following: "In the light, moreover, of the new knowledge we have regarding the joys and sorrows of buds and blossoms, what can be said in defense of the heartless race of florists and horticulturists? Every year—nay, every month!—they deliberately snip off from the parent plant thousands and thousands of unoffending blossoms and innocent buds, who are thus brought to an untimely end. And for what? Merely to heighten, perhaps, the beauty of a ball room!"

Avocados for Ornament.

AVOCADO trees may be obtained in the local plant depots that will meet any demands of climate to be found in Southern California. Some varieties are very tender and if these be planted in the colder locations failure will result for the trees will succumb to the first hard frost. Reputable dealers will advise you as to the hardiest sorts they handle and you may safely plant the sorts they recommend.

Web and Feather Proverbs.

The hen that steals her nest is looking for something better and more comfortable than her owner provides.

On the ranch sour milk and buttermilk will often bring a better price when first converted into hen fruit and table poultry.

As summer approaches, look out for vermin. Lousy hens are never laying ones.

External exercise will produce a healthy internal activity, hens see to it that confined fowl are kept busy scratching for their grain food.

Galvanized iron feeding troughs are preferable to wooden ones, because more sanitary and much easier to keep clean and sweet.

In brooding chicks in nature's way with the old hen, it is important to keep her and her quarters free from lice; this will insure the safety of the youngsters from infection.

To insure the comfort of your chicks under artificial conditions, be sure that the temperature of the brooders is even and sufficiently high. Physical comforts induce robust growth and health.

When feeding greenery to the youngsters, especially when confined, shred or cut it fine. Stems and uncut blades of grass often are the cause of congestion.

Eliminate the slow-growing, emaciated and crippled specimens. At best they are a negligible quantity. By culling them out the remaining ones will be afforded larger opportunity to grow; beside, you economize on the feed bill.

With the big show ahead at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, commence to scrutinize your flock for the prospective exhibition specimens.

Caught on the Wing.

As a result of the campaign against hen fruit unfit for human food, a conference of the "interests" recently held in Chicago, eggs discarded in candling are to be known as "Rejects for breaking purposes only." They may be shipped in properly-sealed packages with suitable identifying marks, and their final destination must be an egg-breaking establishment operated under State license and supervision.

Harry H. Collier has been appointed commissioner of poultry for Washington for the purpose of assembling and caring for the exhibits of fowl from that State to the Panama-Pacific International Show. Being a thorough fancier, he has hitched his wagon to the Stars, and hopes to land in San Francisco at the proper time with a string of from 2000 to 3000 birds.

At the poultry plant of the Washington Agricultural College there are at present 458 laying hens and the average number of eggs laid per day during April was 244; average price received was 17 cents per dozen; number of males sold, 19, at 13 cents per pound.

Under the Oregon law to encourage poultry culture, the Multnomah Poultry Association will receive $2000 annually for premiums. That ought to call out a big entry for the Portland show.

Excursion rates to the convention in San Francisco of the American Poultry Association, to include everything—sleeping-car, hotel bills, admissions to the exposition, side trips on and around San Francisco Bay—are announced from Chicago at $141 for the round trip. Bookings for a Poultrymen's Special are already being made.

The latest addition to things made entirely of metal is the all-steel incubator, which is certainly hard luck on the festive louse and the pestiferous mite.

Do not place the chicks of different hatches in the same broods; better keep each by itself. Different-aged chicks do not travel well together, nor develop right under the same system of feeding and management.

It is better to buy one good male of known breeding quality at a long price than to buy several at a lower figure of depreciated value. By doing so, you are quite sure to enhance quality, which in the long run is more profitable than mere numbers.

What may be said to the contrary by some poultry breeders, notwithstanding, it is our firm conviction that it is good practice to breed only to mature males and females—cocks and hens, rather than pullets and cockerels.

Do not make radical changes in your feeding rations. If a change is deemed advisable, do it gradually. Sudden changes are apt to entail unlooked-for troubles.

The advantages of the infertile egg are summarized in a late bulletin of the North Carolina experiment station as follows: "The eggs do not hatch, do not develop germs, withstand heat, stand shipment well, easily preserved, slow to decay, best for cold storage, cost less, male birds are not required, and are produced just as freely as fertile eggs."

Produce High Temperature.

[Scientific American:] While enormous strides have been made lately in the production of extremely low temperatures, resulting in some most valuable discoveries in the field of science and engineering, high temperature work has been relatively less successful, in spite of the very important results likely to be derived in this connection. In fact, until very recent time, the temperatures of many of our usual sources of light, such as carbon filaments and arc lamp craters, could not be gauged with even a fair degree of approximation.

In an address delivered before the Society of National Culture not long ago, Dr. Otto Lummer, the well-known physicist of Breslau University, [illegible] that the temperature of the positive crater of arc lamps, as determined by himself, viz., about 4500 degrees centigrade, is the highest terrestrial temperature so far realized. Whereas in the case of terrestrial illuminants the actual temperature can be gauged, we must be satisfied with determining the effective temperatures of celestial bodies.

Supposing the sun to radiate like a "black" body, that is, a body perfectly absorbing any incident radiation of any wave-length whatsoever, its "effective" or "black" temperature can be determined from the sum total of radiation sent to the earth (solar constant,) the figure thus found being about 6000 degrees centigrade.

Now, Dr. Lummer, in the course of his recent work, has succeeded not only in reaching, but in considerably exceeding this effective sun temperature. In this connection he was guided by the fact brought out by his previous experiments, that the temperature of the craters of an arc lamp burning in the open atmosphere cannot be driven beyond a maximum figure (4500 degrees centigrade,) this temperature thus being constant within wide limits of current intensity and arc length.

The constancy of this temperature could be due to the carbon's reaching either its melting or its boiling point. Dr. Lummer having yet then been unable to melt the carbon of arc lamps, and the melting of carbon at ordinary pressures being considered unfeasible, he could not but conclude that the temperature observed was the boiling point.

The Poet's Lighting.

Samuel Rogers gave a dinner and had the room decorated with candles placed high up in order to show off the picture, says T. P.'s Weekly. At dinner he asked Sydney Smith how he liked the plan. "Not at all," he replied; "above there is a blaze of light and below nothing but darkness and gnashing of teeth."

Some Experiments with Turkeys. By M. M. Stearns.

BREEDING PROBLEMS.

WHITE HOLLAND turkeys are slightly more susceptible to disease than the breeds with dark plumage. Ever since experimenting with the different varieties I have been trying to secure greater vigor in the Whites. Having a poor start—for the first birds of this breed that I purchased were not strong—I tried for three years to secure stronger poults by bringing in new blood. But while there was some slight gain in strength, it was hardly enough to be noticeable. Finally I sent to Chicago for a gobbler of supposed prize quality. The bird that was shipped to me was not pure white, but had a bluish tinge, having apparently a small amount of Blue or Slate as well as White Holland blood. I hesitated to mate this bird, as it was obviously not pure-blooded, to my thoroughbred White Holland hens, but finally decided to do so. The result was a greater increase in strength than anything I had previously secured. The poults were almost as strong as Bronzes.

In all probability, the White Holland gobblers that I had used during the unsuccessful attempts to get stronger poults were too much like the hens to which they were mated, and were equally susceptible to disease. Apparently the slight touch of an alien strain brought together birds that were more unlike; the result was that the best characteristics of each were transmitted to the baby turks, which were, compared to the previous generation, relatively immune to disease. Moreover, they all showed pure White Holland marking, without a single discolored feature.

Similar results, apparently out of all proportion to the means adopted to secure them, have been obtained by other breeders of my acquaintance through mating birds that were for some reason or other entirely dissimilar. In one instance mating small black turkey hens to a good Bronze gobbler gave hardy poults that grew with astonishing rapidity and were exceedingly vigorous. A few of the young birds showed black plumage and quit growing when they reached the size of the black turkey hens—about ten to twelve pounds. On the other hand, the poults that showed the Bronze feathering grew faster and were hardier than any of the full-blooded varieties on the ranch. There were, of course, exceptions in both Black and Bronze poults, a few of the former attaining fairly good size, and a few of the latter remaining small, but all matured more rapidly than the parent stock on either side, and were more vigorous.

PROPER WAY TO DRESS TURKEYS.

The results of adding a strain of wild blood to the ordinary domestic Bronze turkeys is widely recognized. The poults of the ensuing generation are invariably stronger than the full-blooded Bronze poults. Moreover, it is not necessary to cross the wild birds directly with the domestic Bronze breeds to secure this result; a small proportion of wild blood—such as would be obtained by using a gobbler of one-fourth or one-eighth wild stock—usually gives equally good results.

The problem of feeding baby turks is one that has perplexed every person that has had anything to do with turkeys. And the confusing part of the matter is that under varying conditions varying results are obtained. One rancher of the Pomona Valley who started in to raise turkeys on quite an extensive scale put the small poults on ordinary commercial chick feed with great success. His land is situated at the edge of the hills; his birds were hardy and the weather conditions that season were peculiarly favorable for turkeys. He came to believe that he had made something of a discovery concerning turkeys, and supposed that no better feed for young poults could be found. The following season, still feeding chick feed to the baby turks, he had very poor success, and during the third year ran so far behind that he considered his entire turkey venture a failure and sold out his flock for a fraction of what it had cost him. The point unquestionably was that during the first season the small turkeys were sufficiently hardy to eat the hard grains and other particles, of which the chick feed was composed, and get away with it; the next year when weather conditions were not so good, and the poults did not have so great vitality, poor results were obtained, and in the third season chick feed spelled death.

I have tried the experiment of feeding a healthy brood of poults whole grains from the start—using a single feed of whole wheat at night and allowing the poults during the day ordinary rations of curd, bread and milk, and so on. The turkeys seemed to thrive because of the wheat—but this was an exceedingly healthy brood. I tried the same experiment a couple of weeks later with less sturdy poults that had been hatched in an incubator, and a large proportion of them died; they were not strong enough to eat the heavy grains and profit by them.

It is difficult to make turkey hens sit satisfactorily in confinement. But it can be done. I have tried placing several turkey hens in a single compartment twelve feet square, and found that with some extra care fair results could be accomplished. The nests of five hens in such a compartment were only a few feet apart. Unlike ordinary hens, the turkeys never seemed to learn which was their own particular nest. Whenever any turkey hen left her nest, leaving eggs uncovered, the turkey hen sitting close by would become very uneasy, and not infrequently one of them would leave her own eggs and cover those that were uncovered in the next nest. Only when all the nests were covered could satisfactory sitting go on. If all the hens left the nests at the same time—as when they were fed in the evening—they would rarely all go back on their own nests. However, the incubation was fairly successful and a reasonably good hatch was secured from all the clutches. All the hens were very much more tame than turkey hens ordinarily are.

Breeding with both turkey hens and chicken hens is apt to prove disastrous. If chicken hens only are used, good results can be obtained. Also, when all the poults are with turkey mothers they will usually do well. But a combination of the two is bad. The instincts of the poults lead them to follow the calls of the turkey mothers, instead of the clucking of the foster mothers. Also the peeping of the poults attracts the turkey hens, and they bring their broods around to see what is the matter with the baby turks that have been, so to speak, grafted on the ordinary hens.

One Southern California rancher was fairly successful in using turkey hens for both incubation and breeding in confinement; his method was to provide large, roomy coops, situated at intervals in an inclosed acre of alfalfa. When a turkey hen wanted to sit he would put her in one of the coops in the inclosure, on a nest of infertile eggs. If she did not settle down, he would wait until she had been broken of sitting, and then put her back into the main yard. If she went to sitting quietly, he would substitute good eggs for the fake clutch. When the hatch came out, he would keep the poults penned in with the turkey hens for a day or two, and then by opening a small door in the lattice-work of the coops allow the baby turks to run in and out while keeping the hen shut in. At the end of three or four weeks he would let the turkey hen out into the alfalfa with her brood, taking pains to shut her in again each night. The greatest defect of the system was that the poults would not stay with their own mother turkey; they would go from coop to coop, and get warm under any hen that would hover them. The other turkey hens never pecked at them, and they would occasionally break hens of sitting or spoil clutches of eggs.

Artificial brooding for turkeys has rarely been tried out on a large scale. In the relatively few experiments that have so far been made it has usually proved disastrous. In the first place, incubator-hatched turkeys are not nearly as strong as those hatched under hens, and in the second place, no artificial brooding has been found that is as effective as the brooding of turkey or ordinary hens. One man who tried to handle poults on a large scale in a brooder-house, originally designed for baby chicks, lost heavily through having the poults crowd each other to death. He found it almost impossible to regulate the heat satisfactorily. The poults would stay in the coldest portions of the runways until they were chilled, without ever seeming to learn that they could get warm at once by going to the hover. Then, when trying to get warm, they would crowd and trample each other.

A World's Fair Poultry Show of 10,000 Birds.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

CONDITIONS, AWARDS.

AT THE Panama-Pacific International Poultry Show, to be given in San Francisco next November, there will be no entry fee charged, but a nominal charge of $1.50 will be made for each single specimen, and $4 for each pen (one male and four females;) this merely to cover cost of receiving, cooping, care and feed. Prizes will be paid in full where there are four or more entries in a class. Where there are fewer than four entries in a class, only second-prize money will be paid to first-prize winners. When foreign or other specimens are exhibited that are not recognized in the American Standard of perfection they will be judged by the club standard for the breeds shown, and prizes awarded the same as on standard varieties.

On all breeds and varieties of poultry recognized in the 1915 edition of the American Standard of Perfection and including guineas and pheasants, the following prizes will be awarded:

Cock, hen, cockerel, pullet, to each five prizes: First prize, $5; second prize, $4; third prize, $3; fourth prize, highly commended; fifth prize, commended. Breeding pen, to each five prizes: First prize, $10; second, $6; third, $4; fourth, highly commended; fifth, commended.

On pea fowl, one male and not less than four females: First prize, $35; second prize, $25; third prize, $15; fourth prize, highly commended; fifth prize, commended.

Ostriches, one male and not less than four females: First prize, $100; second prize, $75; third prize, $50; fourth prize, highly commended; fifth prize, commended.

A fee of $7.50 will be charged for a display cage large enough to hold ten or twelve birds which are intended only for display purposes.

It is the hope of breeders and fanciers, having the interest of this big show at heart, that California alone will send to this fixture not less than 3000 entries. To do this, and at the same time secure quality that will win, will of course require some effort and careful selection. Forewarned is to be forearmed, hence the Los Angeles Illustrated Times Weekly admonishes its poultry readers to begin early picking out the prospective exhibition specimens, segregate them from the others, and by a little extra attention and careful feeding, get them in condition for the trial of strength. Indications now are that this show will coop over 10,000 birds. To win in such competition is not only a glory but a good commercial proposition.

Are We Spoiling Two Breeds?

Those of us who have been in the poultry fancy for a longer period than since day before yesterday, can recall the great popularity of the Silver Wyandotte, now but rarely seen excepting a small flock here and there; we can also recall the broad barring of the Plymouth Rock of twenty-five years ago. The first Silver Wyandottes showed broad open lacing, rendering the bird handsome even to a novice; the persistent tendency to produce the fine narrow lacing of the present-day Silver Wyandotte, in our estimation, has injured its beauty and popularity. For the narrow lacing gives the specimens, even with blue ribbon decorations, a smoky, murky sort of an appearance—the narrow lacing at first glance being a negligible quantity in the color scheme of the plumage. This does not appeal to one's sense of the beautiful, and naturally the popularity of the variety has declined. With the Barred Rocks much the same criticism applies. To produce the winners in this variety today calls for double matings in the breeding yards; one for the production of exhibition males and one for exhibition females. This we regard as inimical to the breed. The Standard should be so modified that show birds will produce from one mating for both sexes. The average admirer of Barred Rocks is quite apt to "shy" at a variety calling for the double-mating system, while the beginners will have none of it. Let us return to first principles, and we believe the standing of both breeds will be materially advanced. As a matter of fact the double-mating system is to be deprecated with any and all breeds. No one starting to breed poultry wants to be told that to attain certain results double-breeding pens must be maintained. The average poultryman, whether professional or amateur, "bucks" at the idea and is dead "agin" the practice. And after all, the likes and dislikes of the general public is what makes a thing popular or unpopular. Then why keep up the practice? By so doing, are we not injuring two of the best varieties of poultry in the American class?

A State Poultry Commissioner.

In lieu of the fact that there was some doubt as to the measure creating a California Department of Agriculture becoming law at this session of the Legislature (which would have provided for poultry culture) there was introduced an independent bill creating a poultry commission, which was duly passed. In general terms the duties of this commission are dual in character i.e., both educational and commercial. It provides for the publication of a monthly bulletin in which are to be given practical information and instruction on advanced methods in the care and management of fowl as well as methods of handling and marketing poultry products to the best advantage. It also carries authority to enforce sanitary regulations on poultry farms and in the quality of the finished product and manner of putting the same on the market

To foster and promote poultry culture under the auspices of the State is largely experimental in California, though widely practiced in other commonwealths. That it will work out advantageously if placed in competent hands, there is every reason to believe. The State has given recognition in this respect to horticulture, dairying and agriculture. If feasible in one division of rural economy it is equally so in another. Here's hoping that the Poultry Commission will make good along educational lines, for in no way can it render a greater service than to banish ignorance in every division of the industry. No greater service can a government render its people than to be the means of diffusing intelligence, for on it justice is based, which after all is the fundamental function of government.

Disastrous Experience with Blue Ointment.

Under date of May 18, Mrs. E. M. Thomas of Brea (Orange county) writes to the Times Illustrated Weekly as follows detailing her experiences with its use: "I would like for your readers to learn of my experience with Blue ointment treatment for head lice on small chicks. I believe that one treatment is sufficient and will do the work. I had a beautiful flock of Ancona chicks (fifty in number,) all doing fine. When they were three weeks old I gave them one application as directed by your correspondent April 24, and every one of them died."

This is not at all surprising. All authorities agree that the use of the blue ointment should be limited to adult fowl, and that its application is only by the methods already described in these columns. The use of it on chicks is at best hazardous, in spite of the good results given by a correspondent in these columns under date of April 24. The trouble undoubtedly resulted from applying too much of the ointment, as mercury is a deadly poison.

Dry Feeding, Grain and Wet Mash Ration.

The two systems of dry mash and grains and wet mash and grains, both supplemented with plenty of green food, grit and ground shell, are so well known and widely practiced as to require no description. Experimental tests with these systems that have been carried on by experiment-station workers only confirms their adaptability to the well-being of fowl life, nevertheless, as between the two some variations in final results are enumerated in the two following paragraphs:

Dry feeding—cracked grain, cracked grain and dry mash, or dry mash—all fed in connection with beef scrap, give less rapid growth than the same ration with the mash fed in a moist condition.

Wet mash and beef scrap—fed without cracked grain—produce rapid growth at low cost, and smooth, plump chicks, when mash is made of ground corn, ground wheat, ground hulled oats, and bran; but when mash was composed of by-products and corn meal, with beef scraps, excessive mortality and uneven growth of chicks resulted.

A combination of wet and dry feeding—grain and mash—resulted in low mortality, produced good, active, well-grown, well-feathered chicks, and a more even growth, with low cost per pound of gain in weight.

Young chicks having moist mash with grain made more rapid growth than those having dry mash, but at slightly greater cost per pound gain in weight. Small chicks grew better on moist mash and grain, and larger chicks grew better on dry mash and grain.

Ancient Incubation.

All that most of us can do in print is to follow Emerson's suggestion and try to say old things in a new way, but John Chinaman is more fortunate when it comes to artificial hatching. He has the old way in spite of modern hot-air incubators and hot-water artificial hatching machines. His method may be primitive, but it is novel and hence not without interest. The Chinese poultryman takes a quantity of unhusked rice which he has roasted. This is heated until it is lukewarm. A three-inch layer of warm rice is spread into a tub, and a layer of eggs is placed thereon. Another layer of rice is added and another layer of eggs and finally a last layer of rice over the Edison Says America Need Fear No Foe.

By Edward Marshall.

THE WIZARD'S PLAN.

THOMAS A. EDISON has been considering the relations of the United States to the European war and the possibilities that we may sometime be involved in a great conflict. The great inventor is no peace-at-any-price man. His career has shown him to be a fighter. But he is not a militarist.

He believes that we should be invincible. In the following interview, he for the first time tells the world how he thinks we may accomplish this without so burdening ourselves with taxation as to reduce our living standards and morale to the European level.

His plan for rendering us invulnerable to attack, while at the same time preserving us from high taxation, includes the establishment of new West Points and new naval academies, for the training of officers and a vast system of military and naval education for the rank and file.

He would establish vast reserves of stores and arms and ammunition and he would count rather upon automobiles than upon the railroads for quick transportation.

He would build many aeroplanes and submarines, and he would construct a fleet of cruisers, battleships and other naval vessels—this is his most extraordinary proposal—to be kept in drydock, pratically in storage, and fully up to date, until needed.

We discussed the matter while we sat in the great library of his laboratory, at Orange.

'Several things already have been proved by the war," said Mr. Edison. "One, of course, is that war itself is inefficient. But we knew that. Another is that an 'efficiency' which submerges the individual is an inefficiency."

English Have Had the Better of It.

"As a lay student of the situation it seems to me that the comparatively untrained Englishman has had an advantage from the start just because he has been untrained. This is a striking thing, with a big lesson in it, for the English soldier, I believe, may be regarded, upon the whole, as the physical inferior of the German soldier. Too much military training not only availed Germany nothing, but actually proved her handicap.

"Germany was ready for war after the old idea of readiness, but her army never got to Paris. She was over-ready. She was so over-ready that she was nervous. Her trigger-fingers became jumpy. It was an attack of hysteria, due to over-readiness, which plunged Europe into war.

"Another thing which has been proved is that no engine of destruction or defense can be so effective that the ingenuity of desperate men cannot devise something which will offset it. Germany's new field guns, the secret of which had been so carefully kept, were the sensation of the first weeks of the war, yet France matched them before it was too late."

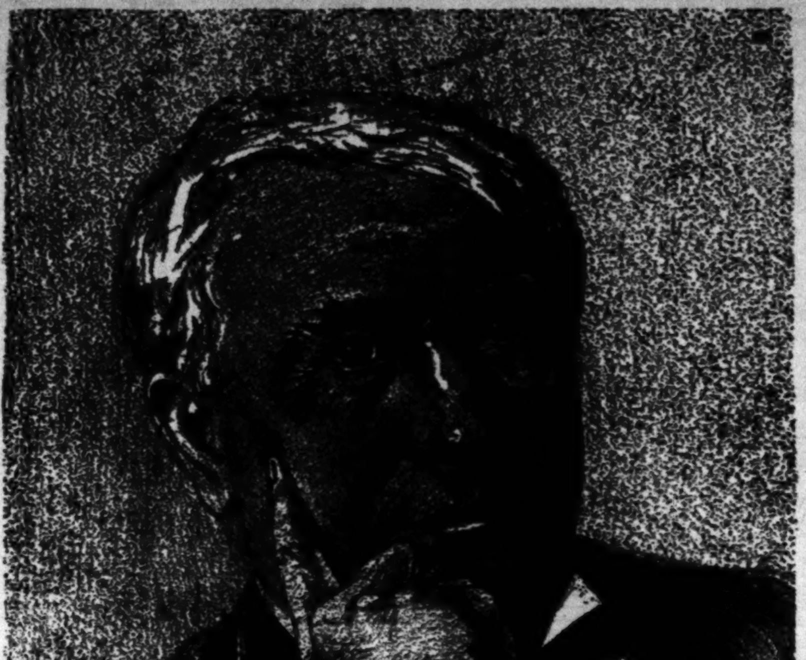
American Ingenuity Would Count.

"In the unavoidable interpretation which one must place upon these facts is another reassurance for America. We are as clever at mechanics, whether they be those of war or those of peace, as any people of the world. We gave the world the ironclad war vessel as the result of one emergency. We gave the world the submarine. Our Wright brothers perfected the aeroplane.

If any foreign power should seriously consider an attack upon this country a hundred men of special training quickly would be at work here upon new means of repelling the invaders. I would be at it, myself. There would be no lack of the spirit of determination or the spirit of self-sacrifice. Of these two qualities was the 'Spirit of '76' made up. It still is latent here."

The Trench a Boon for America.

"I believe that the developments of the European war have proved beyond the shadow of a doubt the uselessness of large standing armies. The best work which has been done has been that of the English and French volunteers and the German Landsturm.



Thomas A. Edison ...

"It has been a war of trench fighting. What does all the elaborate training of maneuvers count in trench work? And what does the fact that it counts little mean? Certainly that the world has wasted a vast amount of money in unnecessary military drill and useless fortifications. I cannot understand the situation in any other way.

"I do not wish any of these statements to lead readers to the belief that I would have my country neglect to realize the necessity of being able to defend itself. I merely wish to call attention to the lessons which the European war seems to me to teach.

"I consider it a reasonable certainty that some day we shall have a war; and I consider it a probability that when that day comes we shall find ourselves unprepared to meet it. I believe it to be the duty of every American patriot to do what he can to see that this does not occur; but I do not believe that the events of recent months in Europe have shown their method of preparation to be the right one.

"Always we have done new things or done old things in a new way, and frequently they have been better things and better ways than Europe has developed. Why should we follow her lead in a military course which has proved to be disastrous to her?

"The European plan of readiness for war really has provoked war. We should evolve a plan of readiness for war which would not do that, but which none the less would worthily protect us."

Edison's Plan of Readiness.

"We should not take our men from industry and overtrain them; but we should have 2,000,000 rifles ready, in perfect order, even greased, with armories equipped with the very best machinery to begin, upon short notice, in case the work should be required, the manufacture of a hundred thousand new firearms every day.

"We should not only have upon hand a large surplus stock of the best ammunition, but we should have government factories equipped to produce a thousand tons of high explosive in a month if need arises.

"We should have a thousand trenching engines ready and should be prepared with every other mechanical device for rapid defense. Of these things I am certain.

"But I do not in the least agree with the advocates of a great standing army or even of a great military reserve. I believe that, all other details having been looked after, we shall be quite safe if we maintain, as now is authorized, an army of, say, 100,000 men.

"With as many men as that with which to meet the first shock of an emergency, I believe that we could confidently count on volunteers to meet what might come later.

"We should organize our State militia upon really efficient lines. It is my belief that it should be under national, not State control. The men who train it, whether their selection be left with the States or be the business of the national government, should be chosen with as much care as that with which I select men for important tasks in my laboratory.

Twenty-five Thousand Drill Sergeants.

"The development of such a method quickly would discover for us, in addition to our standing army, at least 25,000 men especially equipped by natural ability and taste to achieve military efficiency, and these would be drill sergeants, competent to instruct quickly a vast number of soldiers in time of emergency.

"I have suggested 25,000 drill sergeants. We would be doing better if we had 40,000.

"What we want is a small army trained to a big knowledge and trained to teach it as well as to exercise it. Raw material for training is at hand. We have many millions of potential fighting men.

Never Must Be a Military Nation.

"We never must become a military nation, in the old sense of the term; but I believe it possible that we may become one of the greatest of the military nations without burdening ourselves with any comparatively great permanent military expense. Modern warfare is more a matter of machines than of men. Most of the machines are simple matters, if we compare them to the machines of industry.

"If we had machinery at hand with which to equip a million men, we could find the million men upon twenty-four hours' notice. There is practically no military sentiment in the United States, nor ever has been, b we have proved powerful fighters whene we have had to fight.

"What is true of our necessities for machinery is true, also, of our necessities for a great supply of field pieces, large cannon and ammunition. We should have a large number of small factories, equipped and with the raw material at hand in quantities, but so stored as to avoid deterioration, ready to make the latest and most powerful explosives. We should have arsenals with an enormous capacity for the manufacture of large guns, and their facilities should be kept strictly up to date; we should have accurate knowledge of all shops and factories equipped to manufacture tools for defense, aeroplanes and all manner of accouterments. We should have contracts with the owners permitting the commandeering of all such shops in case of war and at a given price for their use, and this should be true of all instrumentalities needed in case of war and instantly operated.

"We need not keep men employed in these shops out of more productive work in times of peace in order that they may be ready to give service if a war should come.

The Matter of Transport.

"We should carefully consider transportation in its changed conditions. The efficiency of the railroad is not, now, a matter of such vital moment for us as a means of moving troops, although, of course, the railroads must remain for many years the chief means by which heavy artillery and supplies will be moved.

"The motor car is more flexible than the railroad, and our roads are reaching such a stage of betterment that automobiles could be generally utilized for moving men.

"Of course, in case of war, troops would be needed on the coasts. Less than 5 per cent. of our country would need defense. All our war would be there.

"The greater part of the transportation to the eastern coast could be most efficiently done by automobiles.

"I do not believe we would lack transport if we organized an emergency system by means of which our vast number of privately-owned motor cars could be commandeered in case war came. It would be easy to commandeer 200,000 automobiles, and 1,000,000 men could be moved 100 miles in a night by using all the parallel common roads.

Coast and Harbor Defense.

"I am the last man who would be willing to suggest parsimony in expenditure upon coast and harbor defense. We should have more guns than we have now at all our harbors and they should be better guns, of longer range than any ship can carry.

"That ought not to be a difficult problem to work out, when it is considered that the harbor defense guns would be mounted upon solid foundations while ships' guns must be mounted upon platforms of a limited carrying capacity.

"I advocate not only the construction of an enormous number of submarines, as I have suggested, to be held in readiness for operations, not to be kept in commission, but in our manufacture at once of a vast supply of harbor-defense mines and the construction of many vessels properly equipped to plant them hurriedly in case of an emergency.

"In trench fighting, with our unlimited supply of the most intelligent and independently-thinking individual fighters in the world, we would be invincible. In case we were attacked we could set our theater of defense to suit ourselves, planning (these figures are wholly tentative) fifty lines of trenches.

"The first line, or even the first two or three lines, would be dug as practically all those in this European war have been dug, by individual soldiers with picks and shovels, but lines to the rear of them could be dug (and this is one of the emergencies for which we should prepare) by trenching machines. We have developed this line of machinery to a state of very high perfection, and to adapt the existing machinery to the purposes of military trenching would be a very simple matter.

"With fifty or more lines of trenches thus quickly, perfectly and very cheaply prepared

Smile's lip, where Pudge's fist had gashed it. His breath was coming faster and his arms grew heavy and slow in their passes. Pudge stood his ground, a sardonic smile on his lips, and met the other's rushes with well-placed blows to the face. He was coolly [illegible] his man on that he might inflict as much punishment as possible before Smile should drop from sheer exhaustion. Once, as Smile rushed his opponent's guard, a short, powerful uppercut sent him [illegible] backward and he fell. He lay for the fraction of a second while Pudge stood menacingly over him. Then in a flash he was up again and his sudden, clean blow to the jaw caught Pudge unexpectedly and sent him flat on his back. With a cry of rage he gained his feet and flew at the smaller boy and his bare knuckles cut cruelly into his face. Smile's nose was bleeding and the gash on his mouth was a deeper one now, but he would not give up. He stood his ground and doggedly took the punishment meted out to him with only occasionally breaking through his opponent's practised guard and landing a weak blow. And then suddenly, with a little cry that was a sob, he fell in a crumpled heap.

A half-stifled murmur of pity arose from the spectators. It was the first sign they had given of their presence, for all through the fight they had stood dumb, each silently praying that Smile, by some miracle, would win. And while Pudge slunk away to enjoy his abominable victory in seclusion they administered tenderly to the vanquished boy.

After the fight the men looked upon Smile with a new respect because of his pluck. Pudge, while his abuse was not so malignant as before, continued to treat him with scant courtesy, to say the least. But Smile, with careless indifference, completely ignored him.

It was some time after this that Smile was given the coveted place as an apprentice. He proved to be only an indifferently good workman. Though he put his best efforts into the work the result always fell short of the requirements. He was not a mechanic—he would never become one, even though he spent years in training. The artist in him predominated to the extent of making useless any attempt at success as a craftsman. He was a dreamer.

To him the blast furnace, sending its vivid, red glow over the scores of workmen, was a great inferno, and the men, stripped to the waist and sweating beneath it, were a great horde of lost souls toiling within its merciless heat forever and ever. And then, when the mass of liquid fire was poured from the furnace into the molds amid great clouds of steam which enveloped the men, he pictured it as another of the tortures of the damned from which they presently arose and continued their toiling. The huge cranes which ground slowly back and forth far overhead in the dim half-light became to him carrion birds of prey, and the columns of girders they carried in their iron talons were their victims clutched in a death grasp. The incessant rattle of many pneumatic hammers was Mephisto's own telegraph sending out orders to his many lieutenants.

Day after day as he stood at his lathe his mind painted these pictures and he dreamed of the time when he should be able to put them on canvas. But it required money to gain the instruction he desired and his scant wage was barely sufficient to meet the necessities of existence. So, with the hope of youth, he dreamed, content to wait until fortune should deign to smile on him. And at length fortune did smile on him; a fleet, tantalizing smile which set his heart to beating with renewed hope.

The superintendent had become interested in the boy and had shown some of his sketches to an artist friend. The artist saw great possibilities in the work of the untrained youth and offered to give him what training he could, and later, if his work proved promising, to aid him in securing instruction from a great artist. So Smile's dream began to assume tangible form.

It was about this time that the foreman of the machine shop discovered the loss of a case of expensive measuring instruments used in the testing of delicate machine parts. A notice to this effect was posted on the bulletin board and a reward of $20 was offered for information which would lead to its recovery. The men gathered before the board at noon, as was their custom, to learn what new edict had been issued from headquarters. But they did not elect to discuss this particular notice while they were all assembled, reserving their opinions until such time as they might comment on it only between friends. Only Pudge, as he stalked away, was heard to mutter something about "these struggling artist guys."

And forthwith, in order to divert suspicion from himself and to further injure the boy against whom he held an unreasonable grudge, Pudge evolved a cunning plan to ensnare the innocent Smile. That afternoon while Smile was temporarily absent from his lathe for a few minutes Pudge took his own instrument case and covertly slipped it into the pocket of Smile's coat, which was thrown carelessly over the tool chest beside the boy's lathe. As Smile returned and resumed his work Pudge's features twisted into an ugly, malicious leer which he took no pains to conceal.

It was almost quitting time before Smile again had occasion to leave his place to go to the oil house for some lubricating oil; and it was while he was absent that the foreman went to the tool chest in search of a needed tool. Pudge, from his lathe near by, glanced up and a light of unholy joy flashed in his dark eyes as he saw the foreman about to life the lid of the chest. This was just what he had hoped for. If only he would find it! It needed but a little move to cause the case to slip out at his feet. And then—he'd get that kid yet.

And Pudge's blackest hopes were realized, for, as the foreman started to raise the lid without removing the coat from its top, the case of calipers dropped to his feet.

"Where's Smile," he demanded, swinging around sharply and addressing Pudge.

"I dunno," Pudge grunted, with just the right amount of careless unconcern and without taking his tool from the work before him.

The foreman strode off in search of the unhappy Smile.

But Smile was at this moment very busy, indeed.

The oil house was in an isolated corner of the yards, far removed from the other buildings because of the ever-present danger of fire. Here were stored many hundreds of gallons of gasoline and other highly inflammable oils which were constantly used in greater or less quantities in all departments of the plant. Every precaution was taken to guard against fire which, should it ever occur, would result in a disastrous explosion.

As Smile approached the oil house his eyes caught the gleam of a tiny flame creeping up the side of the building. It was fire! the much-dreaded fire! He turned to give the alarm—to cry out a warning; but even as he did so he realized the futility of trying to make his voice heard above the roar of the furnace, the rat-a-tat-tat of a hundred compressed-air-hammers, the thousand sounds which arose as one from the great shops. If he attempted to run back and warn them it would be too late. There was but one course to pursue—to master the fire now, alone, while there was yet time.

He ran to the building and grasping a shovel began frantically to throw sand on the flames from the mound that was there for that purpose. The fire was gaining on him. He could not work fast enough to extinguish it in one place before a wicked, blue flame broke out in another. Soon the whole side of the building was a mass of flames and the dry timber crackled as the fire ate into its heart. He heard a great shout from behind him. It seemed to come from miles and miles away. They had seen the fire and were coming to his aid.

But the men stopped short with a gasp of horror as an ominous curl of gray smoke rose from the center of the building. It was too late. At the same instant the boy, realizing that he could not conquer the flames, gave up the fight and turned to dash to safety. In the next moment came an explosion which threw burning debris far in every direction and rocked the buildings to their foundations. And before the horror-stricken gaze of his fellow-workmen Smile was flung to the ground, where he lay, very still.

When tender hands gathered up his bruised body and gently carried him back to the shelter of the great shops whose bedlam was stilled now, he opened his eyes and the old smile came to his lips—the smile which had endeared him to all save one—and, "I did the best I could," he murmured apologetically.

It was subsequently determined beyond a doubt that Pudge was the one who stole the instruments and he was dealt with accordingly. And Smile?

On the wall above my library table hangs a picture. It is a wonderful picture. To describe it in mere words would be impossible. Not the word-mastery of a Shakespeare could do justice to the art of the genius who conceived and executed it. In the foreground looms out the huge bulk of a blast furnace from out of whose cavernous depths flows a stream of liquid fire. Enshrouded in great clouds of living steam, their features distorted with the agony of their suffering, a score of half-clad men toil at their ceaseless labors, while above them hangs suspended a great skeleton of steel, ominous, foreboding, like some huge vulture about to descend upon them. And over all the molten metal casts its crimson glow until the scene seems bathed in blood. Even as I look at it I can hear the ceaseless clatter of "Mephisto's Telegraph."

And down in one corner of the picture is the artist's name—his real name. But to me the letters spell "Smile."

Benny at the Ball Game. By E. Niall Breene.

THE GOOD SPORT.

"GOOD NIGHT," said Ben tragically as he threw down the dainty, scented note. "Don't I have the most outrageous luck? Here's my chance to get that long-promised talk with Betty's father and I'll have to turn it down. Why the dickens did I ever promise to take Kate to that game? I might have known it would happen!"

Ben's despair was caused by a perfectly innocent little "bid" to a lawn party the following Saturday afternoon, from Betty Travers, Benny's best girl. It concluded with the words, "Be sure to come, for Daddy will be there, and you will get a chance to talk to him about that place on the 'Standard.'"

Ben was a railroad clerk, but this was by no means the occupation of his choice, for he was of the type who long for action and the narrow, cramped life of a railroad clerk with its thousand petty details and lack of force galled him. To Ben the life of a reporter with its action, its snap and color, appealed irresistibly. Toward that end he was working, but he was only 19 and there was the little mother to be considered.

Betty's father was part owner in one of the biggest "dailies" on the Coast and now Betty had planned the impossible, namely, a personal interview for Ben.

"You see, Ben," she had said, "I know you can do the work because I was in the journalism class with you for the last two terms, but Daddy doesn't know you can do it. If you went to the office to see him, he would probably tell you that some one else handled all those matters, and then forget all about you. As it is, he knows you when he sees you, and that's all, but if he once has a chat with you, he will be sure to like you and if Daddy once likes you, you're made."

And now the chance had come.

"I'd be a fool not to take it just because of that date with Kate," said Ben to himself. Then the memory of his promise came back to him. Kate, homely, golden-hearted, outwardly a mannish, militant suffragette, but underneath it all wearing the eternal feminine heart. He could hear her now, her plain, homely face red to the ears, saying:

"I hate to ask you, Ben, but I had to show that hateful Allie Banes that I don't always have to go to the game alone. She twitted me, you know, in that sweet way of hers, asking me with whom I was going, and I guess I went wild for a minute, for I said I was going with you. I know I was foolish to care, but all the girls were listening and oh, Ben, you can't understand. You've never been a homely girl and had it 'rubbed in' like that." So Ben had promised, lying like the gentleman he was, and saying that there was no one he would rather take.

Now he shook his head. "I'll have to do it. It would be altogether too rotten for me to turn Kate down now and I won't be a bum sport for all the jobs in town; but what am I ever going to tell Betty? It's all too deep for me." Then, being a true son of Adam, he sat down and wrote a note to Betty, so truthfully untrue that even the recording angel must have winked at it.

For the rest of the week Ben was miserable. Of course Betty could not understand his refusing the big chance, she was highly indignant, and to Ben it seemed that all the world was going wrong. Nevertheless when Saturday came, Ben appeared at the ball game with Kate. He was no grouchy, disagreeable Ben either, but smiling and affable and full of the joy of life. To the complete discomfiture of one Allie Banes, he and Kate chatted gaily, shouted and enjoyed themselves immensely. Not for so much as a minute did he let Kate know what the afternoon had cost him. Yet in spite of it all, deep down in his heart he couldn't help thinking that all the time the minutes were ticking away his first big chance.

Suddenly there was a home run. The splendid bit of work made Ben keenly alive to the joy of the game. He forgot all about the job and Kate, forgot all the world except the diamond and the players.

Then the man beside Ben began to howl lustily:

"Slide, Kelly, slide!" he yelled. Ben wheeled around startled. The man was Betty's father. After the game he found time to shake hands with Ben and chatted affably as they went out. As he stepped into his car he turned and said:

"By the way, Betty was telling me that you are thinking of taking up newspaper work. If you are still in line for a place, drop around to the office tomorrow about 10 o'clock and we will talk the matter over."

Ben roused to hear Kate's voice as from a distance. "Congratulations," she said. "You seem quite familiar with the 'powers that be.'"

"Gee!" said the awakening Ben, "It sure was a shock; here comes our car."

After he had taken Kate home, he called up Betty.

"I've great news, Betty. May I come out?"

"Of course you may," said Betty. "Only hurry, please. I'm dying to know how it all turned out."

"And you're not mad, Betty?"

"Mad? Of course not, silly. I planned the whole thing myself, or most of it."

Twenty minutes later Ben was at the house.

"How did you ever do it, Betty? I know you planned it some way, but it's all too deep for me."

"Well," said Betty. "You see when Kate couldn't come to my party, she had to explain all about it. I was a little worried at first, but of course I couldn't tell Kate what it all meant to you, so I just went to Dad and told him the whole story, about Allie Banes 'rubbing it in' on Kate and you having to miss meeting him, and all because you wouldn't break a promise. Daddy laughed a lot, then he said:

"'By Jimminy, I'm going to this game and get a seat near the boy. If he sticks to his bargain like a man without crabbing, he's the kind of lad I want.' Then Kate called me up when she got home and said that she'd had the best time ever, so I knew it was all right; but oh, Ben, I'm so glad you wouldn't break your promise, 'cause I never could have liked you half so well if you hadn't been a good sport."

The Letter E.

Some one has advanced the opinion that the letter "e" is the most unfortunate character in the English alphabet, because it is always out of cash, forever in debt, never out of danger and in hell all the time.

But we call his attention to the fact, says the Charleston Gazette, that "e" is never in war and always in peace. It is the beginning of existence, the commencement of ease and the end of trouble. Without it there would be no meat, no life and no heaven. It is the center of honesty, makes love perfect, and without it there would be no editors, devils or news.

we could easily defeat, even destroy, any attacking force which the enemy might land from his ships.

"He probably would be able to take some of our first lines of trenches, but it is inconceivable that he could have any men left with which to fight after he had reached, for instance (to select a numeral at random) our twenty-fifth line.

"If the veritable worthlessness of great standing armies and the wicked waste of their maintenance may be considered the most important lesson which the European war so far has held for us, the value of the simple, inexpensive trench is next in importance to us.

"Europe has been conducting a vast and terribly costly experiment for our benefit. She has shown us that in thirty days we can organize a more effective army than the Germans have been able to put into the field if we follow, with the rank and file, the plan of preparation which I have suggested, giving the men the rudiments of training and then returning them to industry.

"She has shown us that we need trained officers. We should immensely increase facilities for training them, even to the establishment of many schools as efficient as West Point.

"But these men, too, should be returned to civil life, after they have had their training, with annual periods of additional study to keep them up to date. They should not be taken permanently from productive and thrust into unproductive effort. They should be kept alive, alert, abreast of everything worth while; we should make splendid all-around citizens of them, fit for unusual usefulness in civil as well as in military effort.

Need Much Larger Navy.

"I think we never should let up on training men for the navy. We should have the greatest number of trained naval sailors that any nation ever has had, but we should not let them eat their heads off after they have got their training.

"We should greatly increase our number of competent naval officers, but we should not make the work of most of them a life career. Like the officers we train for military service, our naval officers should be developed to the top notch of efficiency and then sent back to private life upon part salaries and required to keep up with new developments and be ready for a call if one should come.

"I believe that we should have a navy larger than our present fleet, probably much larger, but I do not believe that the additional ships should be kept in commission.

"I should not in the least object to the payment of my share of the tax which would be necessary for the construction of a dozen dreadnaughts or, for that matter, of two dozen dreadnaughts, but I should strenuously object to the payment of a tax for the support of all of them, manned and in commission, during days of peace.

Ships Should be Built and Stored.

"After each ship is built it should be launched and tested, and then, like the arms and ammunition, it should be stored till the day of need came. Enough vessels of the most approved type should be kept in commission to be used as training ships and enough men should be trained so that we would have no difficulty in finding competent crews for all our vessels. Create a great surplus of trained men, then send them back to industry, with payment of a small annual retainer.

"I believe that in addition to this, the government should maintain a great research laboratory, jointly under military and naval and civilian control. In this could be developed the continually increasing possibilities of great guns, the minutia of new explosives, all the technique of military and naval progression, without any vast expense.

"When the time came, if it ever did, we could take advantage of the knowledge gained through this research work and quickly manufacture in large quantities the very latest and most efficient instruments of warfare.

"England is doing great work now, with wonderful artillery. By far the greater part of these big guns have been created out of raw material since the beginning of the war. They seem to be as effective as if not more so than the German guns, which were made in advance of and in anticipation of the conflict, succeeding many other guns, made in former years of peace, but, becoming antiquated, presumably melted up to furnish some of the material for the new artillery.

"At this great laboratory we should keep abreast with every advanced thought in armament, in sanitation, in transportation, in communication—as, for example, under the last-named head, with the rapidly developing telegraph and telephone, and under the head of transportation, with motor-car building.

"If we did this we very quickly could manufacture supplies in wholesale quantities when the need for them arose. We could see to it that no attacking nation could have longer-range or more accurate artillery than we would be prepared to make upon short notice.

"Such a development bureau is entirely practical. I believe that if we ask for it the government will give it to us. Every corporation of importance now has an organization of the sort. The Pennsylvania Railroad has one. The corporations either had to follow out this plan or accept defeat at the hands of more progressive competitors.

"Business, in a sense, is warfare. A corporation, like an army, must either keep up with the proctssion or go under. Business methods would work as well with an army or a navy as they work with Ford in the manufacture of his motor cars, or as they work with Rockefeller in the preparation of petroleum products, or, to cite a governmental job, as they worked with Goethals in building the canal.

"The task of keeping everything at the top notch of scientific perfection, ready to be put into operation at a moment's notice, is a business man's job, not a soldier's or a sailor's job. They should be disciplinarians, busy with the training, every year, of the new crop for the reserves.

"Naval officers should not be called upon to be inventors of new scientific instruments or agencies. They are executives; research work should be in the hands of scientists trained to it and developed in it through the continuous and practical activities of commercial competition."

I asked Mr. Edison if the organization of a board of practical scientists, the most eminent in the country, as an auxiliary of our defensive forces would not be a good idea, and if he would volunteer to serve as one of its members if requested.

"I would join such a board, of course," he answered, "but I am doubtful about its efficiency. I am afraid it wouldn't work. It certainly would not if it had a large membership."

"Six men?" I suggested.

"Not more than three," he answered. "And it would not do the most important work. The development laboratories and the drill sergeants would do that."

What Edison Thinks of Gardner's Plan.

I asked Mr. Edison to specifically comment on the movement which formed one of the most conspicuous features of the recent Congress—that led by Mr. Gardner for a vast increase in our military expenditure.

"The Gardner movement is unqualifiedly bad," he answered without hesitation. "We don't need any such 'preparedness' as he and his associates are advocating. For Gen. Leonard Wood I have the highest and most profound respect; but I do not agree with him in his opinions as to what is necessary to the welfare of this country in the way of a military establishment.

"We do not need the great machines which these undoubtedly well-intentioned gentlemen are advocating. There is infinitely less reason to believe, today, that we need them, than there was before the outbreak of the European war. We now know how to fight. We did not know, Europe did not know, until this war developed.

"Thus, and in my belief thus only, can we assure our safety from attack, and, by assuring this prevent attack, without burdening ourselves with a vast military expenditure, without robbing industry and professions other than the military and the naval of men needed in them by the nation.

"There is a great social lesson as well as a great economic lesson and there are many military and naval lessons to be drawn from this European war by the United States, and every one of them emphasizes the foolishness of the old European method which taxed the people to the breaking point, robbed society of the useful effort of its fittest, and, in the end, precipitated war."

Granddad of the Movies. By Alice Harriman.

MEMORIAL DAY.

"I WISH I knew where I could find a sober, one-legged man," sighed Thaxter Brigham, director of Company Four of the Foothills Motion Picture Company.

Paul Wharton looked quickly across the table in Miss Hick's lunch room; but the director's remark was addressed to Miss Margery Carlisle, leading woman of the Foothill studio; and the boy repressed eager information.

"Yes?" queried Miss Carlisle, mildly interested. Then, with more animation, "Why not ask Mr. Drewaye or some of the other 'stars' to sacrifice themselves for 'art's sake?'" The girl smiled at the boyish face opposite. She and Paul were "pals;" and they knew that the stout, important director would not see the little joke.

"I could use a one-legged man," affirmed Mr. Brigham, deaf to anything but his own thoughts. "The Foothills stands for realism, you know," he continued, his self-consciousness showing whom he thought most instrumental in maintaining that desirable reputation.

Miss Carlisle rose.

"I'm going to walk across to the studio with Paul," she said; and the director, ordering a second cup of coffee, nodded absently.

"O, Miss Margery," cried Paul, so soon as they were on the street, "won't you ask Mr. Brigham if he won't take on my granddad? He has only one leg."

"Have you a grand-dad? How lovely!" The leading lady spoke wistfully and her eyes, colored like a dragon fly's wing, turned from the multi-shaded slopes beyond the studio to look affectionately at the manly little chap at her side. "Why should you ask me to intercede for your grandfather? I'm sure Mr. Brigham will consider him for your sake as readily as for mine."

Paul demurred. He thought that Margery could present the case better; but the pretty girl—pretty despite her 1840 gown and her make-up, which she had not removed before going to lunch—thought differently.

Thereupon the boy plucked up courage and during the afternoon asked Mr. Brigham if he might bring "Grandfather Osborne" to the studio.

"How old is he?"

"He's an old soldier."

"H-m-m-m."

Paul accepted this as an adverse decision and turned to go.

"Wait a moment. Is your grandfather at the Soldiers' Home?"

"Oh, no. He lives with us."

The director thought a moment. "What makes you think he would be what I——"

"You ought to see grand-dad act out his war stories! He's bully!" Confusion seized the lad for the director had a way that did not invite enthusiasm. "I mean—I thought you would know, when you saw him," Paul concluded, unconsciously flattering.

The man smiled. He was not so far from boyhood that he could not catch the glow. Paul was a favorite, too; although like most directors, Mr. Brigham did not voice his sentiments. The lad was apt and obedient. Already he showed such promise that there was talk of putting him under a five-year contract instead of keeping him "on guarantee;" for his clear gray eyes, fine and mobile face and well-formed body, as well as his intelligent work, had been noted by rival companies.

"What do you do with your money?"

"I—why—I give it to mother. She's not very strong. Father—is dead."

"I suppose it helps out your grandfather's pension."

"He doesn't have any."

"Why?"

"He can't remember where he lost his discharge papers, or if he ever did have a pension. You see, grammy thought he was dead because he didn't come, and she died. And mother grew up and married and came out here. Grand-dad came just before father died."

"Well, bring him around. I'll see what I can do."

"Oh, thank you, Mr. Brigham! But—I forgot to tell you. Grand-dad can't remember anything except about the battles. And he can't seem to sense the words, so he can't read."

"That won't make any difference," said the director, kindly. "He's too old for war stuff; but we'll see." With a nod of dismissal Mr. Brigham turned to other matters.

Grandfather Osborne proved to be suited to many parts and before long was an accredited member of the Foothills Company. You who have seen their releases will recall the dear old man whose work brings the smile and the tear together. You'll remember that he often holds an old-fashioned leather wallet—the kind that has a strap around it. Mr. Brigham could not persuade him to relinquish it nor to keep it in his inner pocket. It was as much a part of him as his faded suit of blue.

When he takes the part of a beggar, he is good; as a sea-beaten, aged sailor, sitting on a wharf and shading his eyes to catch the first glimpse of the returning fishing fleet, he is excellent; but as an old soldier, with the little button that veterans wear, telling stories to children, or marching in some parade with Paul helping him to carry a splendid flag like the one he carried alone during the war; or when strewing flowers on a comrade's grave, he is best of all—himself. You have applauded him many and many a time.

But you will not see grand-dad any more in filmland—nor Paul. And the reason is because something perfectly glorious happened, happened because he was in the movies; and never would have happened if Paul hadn't overheard Mr. Brigham's expressed need for a one-legged man.

And it came about in this way:

During the fall a picture titled "Happy Hours" was made, featuring grand-dad. It "ran big" wherever the Foothills films were shown. The story had to do with a Grand Army episode and the veteran received so many letters from other old soldiers that Paul gave up trying to answer them all.

These letters afforded grand-dad much pleasure. When the long waits came, which often occur in a studio, he and Paul sought a quiet nook behind a "set" of a mining camp street, or a perch on an ox cart, out of way of men hunting for stray backgrounds or boards, and speculated about the unknown correspondents.

Very often grand-dad opened his wallet and looked over its yellowing contents. He held each sheet motionless a moment, his eyes fixed on the caption; then glanced down the page and halted at the signature. But no recognition of the meaning dawned on his face. He sighed, the patient, despairing sigh that always made Paul choke; and, averting his face, held out the page to be read aloud.

"No," he would say, "that is not the one," and sigh again.

During one of these hours in May they were called.

"Mr. Brigham wants yer!"

"Grand-dad or me?"

"Both."

Grand-dad hastily replaced his old papers and Paul assisted him across the open-air stage shaded with sliding lengths of factory cloth. Babies and black mammies; historic characters and Fifth-avenue beaux; cowboys and carpet baggers, Becky Sharps and Broadway belles, dawdling until their respective directors should call them, made way for grand-dad.

A lady was sitting beside Mr. Brigham's desk.

After introducing them the director explained:

"Mrs. Dorne is president of the Relief Corps at Palmyra. She is planning to have 'Happy Hours'——"

"For our Memorial Day exercises," finished Mrs. Dorne, "and I came to invite Comrade Osborne to be our special guest. We'd like to have you——" she turned to grand-dad, "on the stage with the post and corps, after the picture is run. My husband is speaker of the day."

Grand-dad looked at Paul, uncertain; but the supplicant had further favors to ask.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren.

By Mabel Herbert Urner.

A SAD SITUATION.

THE dingy lobby of the Earlton was typical of the small, second-rate hotel. A colored youth in a shabby uniform lounged on the bench by the elevator and a thin, pallid-faced clerk stood behind the desk, languidly sorting the mail.

Helen approached the desk and then drew back in confusion. She had forgotten the name she was to ask for! Stepping behind a dusty artificial palm that graced the lobby, she hurriedly consulted the note in her purse:

"——I am at the Hotel Earlton, 124 W—— street, registered under the name of Mrs. Wilcox. Can you come to me here? No one else must know.

"EDITH M. COLBURN."

Again she approached the desk. The clerk turned with an inquiring air, but without glancing up from the letters.

"I should like to see Mrs. Wilcox."

"Expecting you?"

"Yes, but perhaps you'd better announce me—Mrs. Curtis."

"Oh, you can go right on up—4-B."

Helen stepped into the elevator, and the boy, shuffling off his bench, took her up to the fourth floor.

Four-B was the last door down the narrow, red-walled hall. Helen knocked twice before she heard the slipping of a bolt, and the door was cautiously opened.

The moment she entered, Helen felt the emotionalism with which the room was charged. Mrs. Colburn was in a loose gown, her hair in two long braids. On a chair were her street suit and hat, and a large traveling bag stood on the table.

Rebolting the door, she turned to Helen with a desperate, reckless gesture. She had not spoken.

"When did you come here?" asked Helen tensely.

"Last night."

"He doesn't know—where you are?"

"How can he? I'd never even heard of this place before. I drove round in a taxi and stopped at the first cheap, obscure-looking hotel. He might look for me in the big hotels—but never here."

"But you can't stay here," glancing around the cheerless room with its scarred wall paper and faded carpet.

"I can for a while. It's quiet and cheap—that's all I ask just now."

She had dropped into a chair, and now as she leaned forward, her hands rigidly clasped, Helen saw how utterly worn and haggard she was. In the gray light from the one court window her face looked ashen.

"Last night," asked Helen gently, "was he so much worse?"

"Oh, he was drunk, of course—he hasn't come home sober for a week. But it wasn't that—it was something very different. Something I hadn't dreamed of before."

Opening the bag on the table, she took from an inside pocket a square blue envelope.

"Read that," quiveringly, handing it to Helen.

It was addressed to Mr. Ed W. Colburn, 1158 Wall street, which Helen knew was his office. The note was short, and in a crude, sprawling hand.

"Eddie Boy: The wrist watch is a beaut! But you needn't think you can always square things with a present. I waited there until 9:30, and I was pretty sore when you didn't show up. Make it the same place Friday, and this time you'd better be Johnny-on-the-spot. Yours, FLO."

"Well?" with a sort of fierce impatience.

"Oh, I don't know what to say," faltered Helen.

"If you'd put up with a drunken, brutalized husband just because you believed he was true to you, and then found that note in his pocket, wouldn't you have done what I'm doing?"

"I don't know—I don't know. I might not have the courage."

"Oh, I haven't much courage," contemptuously. "If I'd stopped to think it over, if I'd waited until this morning—I probably wouldn't have gone. But last night I was WILD! Within ten minutes after I'd read that note, I'd thrown some things into that bag and was out of there. He was too drunk even to know when I went."

"What time was that?"

"After 12. I told the hall boy to call a taxi—that a friend was sick and had phoned for me. Oh, it was all so weird," shuddering, "that drive through the night alone—and stopping at this place."

"Yet they gave you a room. I didn't think they would—a woman alone after midnight."

"Oh, it may not be even respectable here—but what do I care?" Then taking her purse from the bare bureau top back of her: "Will you get this check cashed? I can't cash it here, and I dread going out just yet. If you'll do this, and bring me the money tomorrow——"

"Of course I will! Only I'm afraid I'm helping you to do something that'll not make for your happiness."

"Would it make for my happiness to go on living with him? As long as I thought he was true to me—oh, I think a woman can put up with anything if only she feels sure of that! But now—after that note——"

"But if he'd been drinking—can't you see a man might do a thing then that he wouldn't if he were himself?"

"He hadn't just met this girl—her note shows that—this is only a sort of last straw. If I've a shred of self-respect, I'll never go back. As soon as I can pull myself together, I'm going to Dr. Gardner—to ask him to get me into a nursing school. He's always been our physician; he knows Ed better than anyone—and I believe he'll uphold me in this."

"A nursing school?" repeated Helen, amazed.

"What else can I do? I can't go into an office—I don't know stenography or bookkeeping. But I can enter a training school for nurses—and in three or four years I'll have a profession."

Helen looked at her wonderingly. Could this delicately-reared woman, unused to work, go through the arduous drudgery of a hospital course in nursing? Was she physically strong enough?

"I'm stronger than you think," divining Helen's thoughts. "I've had to be, or I couldn't have gone through this past year. I'm 26, rather old to start to learn a profession, isn't it?" bitterly. "But they'll take you in a nursing school up to 30. It's the only thing I could take up now, and if I wait much longer—I'll be too old for that."

It had grown dusk before Helen finally started to go.

"I hate to leave you here! This room is so gloomy—the whole house is so depressing. Can't you go to a more cheerful place?"

"Oh, I don't think of the place. I dread the night, but if I can't sleep—I'll take some bromide, and in a day or so I'll see Dr. Gardner."

At the door she caught Helen's arm and held it with rigid tenseness.

"Now, I don't think Ed will come to you. He won't dream that you know. But if he should—I can depend upon you not to tell him? You mustn't think that anything you could do would bring us together now."

"No, I'll not take that responsibility. I'll not try to shape things in any way—I'll promise you that."

When Helen reached the street, it was a quarter after 6, and for once she overcame her deep-rooted economy and signaled a passing taxi. She must get home quickly. Warren was probably already there.

It was the hour of the home-going crowds, but Helen leaned back, still absorbed with the scene in that dingy hotel room, the very air of which had vibrated with Mrs. Colburn's intensity.

She pictured her going there after midnight. What must have been her sensation when she found herself alone in that strange hotel? How had she spent the rest of the night? And today? And now tonight? But she had said she would take some bromide if she could not sleep.

Was she all wrong? She had endured so much from her husband—should she have tried to endure this, too?

It took courage, infinite courage, for any woman to leave a comfortable home and go out, wholly unfit for the grim, sordid struggle of earning her own living. Would her courage hold? Would she have the strength to go on—or would she let her husband seek her out and yield to his plea to return?

When she left the taxi at the door, Helen's upward glance sought the windows of the eighth and ninth floors. The Colburns' apartment was dark—it seemed a sinister darkness. But her heart leaped at the cheerful glow that shone from the windows on the floor below. Warren was there!

She was conscious of a sudden feeling of guilt that she could never quite appreciate her own well-being except by contrast with the distress of someone else.

Once before Mrs. Colburn's unhappiness had brought to her the realization of the peace and security her own life held. But now she would make this realization permanent. She would no longer let the trivial things blind her to the greater ones.

And Warren's faults of irritability seemed now so trivial! They had seemed trivial before, yet always they had loomed large again. But hereafter she would keep this moment before her. When his ill-humor was the most trying, she would remember what she felt NOW.

Aglow with the enthusiasm of this resolve, she hurried in to the elevator. Yet under the thrill of thankfulness for her own happier lot, was the haunting thought of that dark, empty apartment—and Mrs. Colburn alone in that gloomy hotel.

The Youth with a Smile. By Harold H. Scott.

A DIRE DESIGN.

HE WAS an awkward, ungainly youth of 18 when he first appeared at the shops and struck the foreman for a job.

"What can you do?" he was asked.

He was silent for a moment, shifting restlessly from one foot to the other and nervously twisting his blue denim cap in his fingers.

"I guess I can't do much of anything," he admitted at last, rather crestfallen at the realization that he was not the skilled mechanic he must needs be to obtain employment. "But I can learn," he added hopefully and with certain conviction.

"We have no opening a present for apprentices," the foreman told him shortly and strode away about his business.

The boy took a step after him, hesitated, made a half gesture of appeal with his outstretched hand, and then, dropping it to his side, turned and went slowly out of the yards, a half smile on his lips.

The next day he came again and again the foreman told him he had no work for him and again he left with a smile on his face. On six consecutive days he appeared and on each occasion left unsuccessful, but smiling.

It was on the seventh day, a Monday morning, that his perseverance gained its reward. The foreman was standing in the machine shop consulting with the superintendent when the boy appeared and stood at a respectful distance waiting for them to finish. The foreman saw him and, nettled at his persistency, remarked to the superintendent that he was going to fire him out for the last time and if he showed up again—his pause was eloquent of the dire misfortune which would befall the lad if he dared to bother him again.

"Send him around to me," the superintendent interposed quietly. "A young fellow who is as anxious to obtain work as he seems to be deserves to be given a chance."

So it happened that he was given a position—running errands and doing small jobs about the plant wherever he could be used. He was a conscientious and willing worker; a cheerful, honest lad whose happy demeanor soon earned him the nickname of "Smile." He took the well-meant "joshing" of the workmen with a laugh, but never with a resentful retort, and because he was so good-natured about it he was the victim of more than his share of their practical jokes.

But he nad his serious side, too. Sometimes during the noon hour, after he had finished his meager lunch, he would steal off to some quiet corner and amuse himself by drawing sketches of scenes about the shop and perhaps of some of the workmen. He carried a notebook which was filled with his drawings, the crude sketches of a beginner, but all holding something of the untrained touch of the born artist. He was very sensitive about his drawings and while most of the men at length came to know that he made sketches, none of them had ever seen any of his work until one day when Pudge Terry—but I will relate this in its proper place.

Pudge was a machinist's apprentice; a stout, husky fellow of about Smile's own age, but of much larger build and fully thirty pounds heavier. He was one of those queer composite creatures, more beast than man, who fear neither man nor devil and hold in utter contempt all those who are their inferiors in physical prowess. To gain his respect one must, in ring parlance, put him down for the count, or at least be able to hold his own in a hard-fought fistic encounter. On those rare occasions when he came to work with a half-closed eye or a badly-swollen lip his fellow-workmen refrained from any comment, but secretly made note of the fact that Pudge had made a new friend.

From the first day of Smile's advent the men had predicted trouble between these two, but Smile seemed happily unconscious of it and treated Pudge with the same good-fellowship he extended to all the others. Despite the fact that the apprentice did all in his power to antagonize him with taunts and jeers which were nothing short of insults, Smile took it all in good part and without offense.

But the day came when Pudge committed an act which set Smile's blood afire and stirred to wrath the demons of fury which no one dreamed lay hidden within this quiet, mild-mannered youth.

Smile had finished his lunch and was seated on a casting in the foundry sketching when Pudge came upon him.

"Whatcha think you're doin'?" His tone was rancorous, invective.

Smile had not heard his approach and as he turned in surprise Pudge's eyes rested for a moment on the sketch the boy was drawing.

"I'll learn ye to draw funny pictures of me, ye dirty brat."

For a moment Smile stared at him in amazement, utterly unable to realize that Pudge had wantonly destroyed his cherished sketchbook. But the hostility that flashed from the black eyes before him was proof that this was no act to turn off lightly with a smile. The fellow had meant to incite him to anger. He jumped up and, before Pudge could guard against the blow, sent his lean arm crashing to his tormentor's chin. It was the first blow and a clean one, but it availed nothing against the furious onslaught the more experienced fighter returned.

Smile knew nothing of the science of the game; he had never even heard of the Marquis of Queensberry, but he stood up bravely before the clever brute who held him at his mercy and jabbed him viciously at will. The men had come running from all parts of the plant and stood looking on helplessly, thrilled, as men always are at an exhibition of fistic cleverness, yet displeased at the unequalness of the contest, each waiting for the other to take the initiative and separate the combatants.

A fleck of blood appeared and grew on

"Go ahead, dad," urged Mabel, with a friendly laugh.

Helen merely smiled at him. He returned the smiles, glancing from one to another with the same peculiar look on his face. Their suspicions, however, had been lulled—they saw in him only the doting husband and father.

"Twenty years ago," he began slowly, "I was working on a salary. Your mother and I had a little home—both you children were babies then—and we were very happy."

"Very happy," echoed Mrs. Marsden. She had resigned herself to listen to this rambling talk with what grace she could assume.

"We were very happy," he repeated, and a wistful expression hovered on his features for a second. "Then I became a partner in the firm and the business began to grow rapidly. The family expenses, however, grew even more rapidly than the business. You remember our first disagreement, Margaret. I thought we were carrying more sail than we should, but you overruled me. I confess I was weak—I should have stood firm, but I did not. The result was that I stole money to keep up appearances—the appearance which meant so much to you."

Mrs. Marsden started to her feet. "Henry! Are you crazy? What are you saying—that you stole money?"

"You need not be blamed," her husband replied without raising his voice. "I stole it by perfectly legal means. There is no danger of your being the wife of a convicted criminal. At first I thought it would only be the one time—that never again would my expense account overbalance my income. The business was growing rapidly, but you always managed to keep ahead with the expenses. I stole more and more—taking desperate chances. As a consequence I am an old man at 50 years of age, and I rather think"—he glanced toward the photograph lying on the table, "that you will see little about me that faintly resembles the man I was twenty years ago."

"You never stole a cent, Henry," exclaimed his wife in an exasperated tone. "It's just your exaggerated sense of honor that makes you talk this way. Other men don't worry about those things."

"Don't they? Well, maybe not. However, I had one great comfort then—my children." He turned to his daughters. "When you were young, you were a source of joy to me, but it could not last. You became used to demanding things—things that I could not always afford to give you, and my refusal cut two ways. It made me diffident with you, and it made you think I was mean—stingy."

"Oh, I'm sure——" began one of his daughters.

"Please do not lie," he cut in, stern for the first time. She dropped her eyes before his.

"However," he continued in his former even tone, "all this is but preparatory to what I have to say. Until five years ago I struggled to give you everything that I possibly could. Then I stopped."

"What do you mean, Henry?" said his wife. "You are doing yourself an injustice. You have been—are always, generous. We appreciate it. You have given us everything."

"Oh, no, I have not," he returned, smiling, "not during the last five years. We are living in the same style we were five years ago. During that time my income has doubled. I have been successful—wonderfully so."

"Oh, papa," cried both daughters, reproach and pleasure mingled in their tones.

"Then we can go to Lenwood," exclaimed his wife, with a sigh of relief. Long practice had taught her to seize the psychological moment whenever or however it might arrive.

He looked at her coolly. "Yes," he said, "you may go to Lenwood if you wish."

"Isn't that fine, girls? You must thank your father. Very few men are so kind as he is."

"Indeed, papa," they cried, "you are perfectly dandy."

He turned to the window for a moment. When he again faced the room there was an air of visible restraint about him. He seemed to be holding himself in an iron grip.

"You must not overlook the fact," he said in an almost harsh tone, "that I have given much for this wealth. For the last twenty years I have sacrificed everything to gain it. I have thrown overboard every ideal which as a young man I held. I have lost the good will and respect of my fellowmen, and my own self-respect. I do not possess one real friend. In other words, to obtain this money I have murdered my true self. That young man of the photograph no longer exists."

There was an uneasy silence.

"Really, dear," said Mrs. Marsden at last, rising, "we must run and dress or we will be late to our engagement. You know that we are going out tonight."

He detained her with a motion of his hand. "Wait just one moment; I still have something more to say."

"Do you want us to stay, too, papa?" asked Helen. She rose, and her sister followed her example. "If not——"

"Stay," he said. "I will not detain you long."

They seated themselves again in an uncomfortable silence.

Looking at him, each one of the women felt as if she were looking at a stranger, as if some invisible bond connecting her to him had snapped. His next sentence was almost weirdly a confirmation.

"Tonight," he said quietly, "I am going west—alone—for good."

The three gazed at him in startled speechlessness.

"For five years," he went on in a cool, detached tone, "I have been playing a game. I have tested thoroughly your feelings for me—I have even feigned sickness at times to make the test complete in that quarter. I have feigned business reverses, feigned a longing for love and understanding which I was all but past feeling. You, without knowing it, have been on probation. I have analyzed your motives, studied you as a scientist would study a specimen, with a view to finding out just what place I held in your lives. I found, in the final analysis, I was nothing more nor less than a provider. You will note that I am not indulging in any recriminations. I am merely stating the conclusions I have drawn, and the course which, in view of those conclusions, I am determined upon."

His wife found her voice. "You are certainly crazy, Henry," she cried. "How dare you talk to us like this?"

"Not crazy, Margaret. On the contrary, I am brave enough to be sensible. You, not I, have determined my status; I am simply acquiescing, that is all, only I prefer to be a provider at a distance rather than here."

"But you can't do it, Henry. Think of the disgrace——"

He interrupted her. "As a provider, I need think of nothing except providing. In the drawer of that table there, you will find deeds to certain properties which will render you exactly the same income which you have had for the last five years. The increase of my fortune during these last five years I consider my own to do with as I please, and this I shall take with me into my new life. I might warn you, Margaret, and you, Helen, and you, Mabel, that I have allowed you much more than you could possibly get by any legal proceedings in whatever form."

"But, Henry," cried his wife, brokenly, "what will people say—how can we explain? This will kill us."

"It will not kill you," he returned coolly. "It may be—probably will be—unpleasant. To offset this unpleasantness I have made each of you a present besides the deeds I mention. You will find these also in the drawer of this table. And now I will bid you good-by. I am taking nothing with me. I prefer to buy what I need and sever old connections completely."

He moved toward the door. "Good-by, Margaret. Good-by, Helen and Mabel. I wish you all three the greatest happiness."

He bowed an ironical bow and was gone.

The three women stood as he had left them, their faces burning under his arraignment. They heard his heavy footsteps on the porch and then diminishing down the graveled walk.

With one accord they moved toward the table.

A Chinese Legend of the Opal. By Dessa H. M. Fultz.

THE "LOVE STONE."

AH KIM handed me the package the postman brought, saying:

"From my city."

My heart beat faster as I looked at the postmark—"Canton, China." I started. Could it be a message from the one I could never forget, but who had been silent so long?

With the characteristic curiosity of an old and privileged Chinese servant, Ah Kim stood watching me as I opened my package. I was as curious as Ah Kim, for it was not a large package, but securely wrapped. Inside the heavy paper I found a wooden box. I must confess it did not look as if it contained anything mysterious. But boxes are like people; some are not very interesting on the outside, but when you once begin to explore, you find them full of wonderful surprises. So I untied the cords that bound the box, and lifted the lid. Inside was something wrapped carefully in soft silk. Even my passive Chinese boy leaned forward in excitement, and as I removed the silken cover we both exclaimed in admiration.

There lay an exquisite box of lacquer, shaped like a big butterfly with wings outspread. The sides of the box of wonderful red lacquer, the butterfly, with all of its wonderful iridescent coloring, looking as if it only poised a moment, then would fly to alight on some gorgeous flower.

"That is very, very old," said Ah Kim, "someone wishes you long life."

I looked at him perplexed, for I did not understand.

"Why?" I asked.

"Because in my country the butterfly means 'long life.' There are always two of them; please lift the lid, maybe there is one inside."

I did as he suggested, and there lay the twin butterfly of the one on top. I lifted it to place it beside the cover, for it proved to be a tray, and in doing so my eye was caught by a flash of light.

There, in a nest of cotton, lay the most beautiful fire opal I had ever seen. As the sun's rays fell upon it, it seemed to be fairly alive with light and color. I caught my breath in wonder, and Ah Kim whispered:

"The wonderful love stone!"

"No," I answered, "not a 'love stone,' we call it a stone of 'bad luck.'" Yet, as I looked at its marvelous colors, I wondered how anyone could believe a thing of such beauty could bring 'bad luck.'

"But in my country," urged Ah Kim, "it is a stone of love. You never have heard how the first opal came?"

"No," I answered, "please tell me."

So Ah Kim told me this tale of the "love stone, called the opal."

"Many, many years ago, when the world was young and there were not so many people on the earth, the sun was inhabited by little Golden Men, and the moon by beautiful little Silver Ladies.

When the sun climbed over the edge of the world in the morning, the little Golden Men let golden ladders down to the earth, down which they came. They played all day in the warm sunshine and knew nothing but joy and gladness. But when the sun began to climb over the rim of the world at night, all the little Golden Men ran lightly up the golden ladders to their home in the sun. For if the Queen of the Moon Land found any of the little Golden Men on the earth after the sun had gone into the land of the beyond, it would mean death to them.

As the last rays of the sun faded from the earth, the silver moon floated over the far edge of the world. Then the silver ladders were let down to the earth and the wonderful little Silver Ladies from the Moon Land descended and danced in the silver light. They might play while the moon circled the heavens; but when she reached the far edge of the world, they, like the little Golden Men, must go back to their home. For it would mean death if the King of the Sun Land should find any of them on the earth when he returned in the morning.

The beauty of the little Silver Maidens had been whispered of in the land of the Sun, but none had ever seen them. Moved by an irresistible desire to see the Silver Ladies of the Moon Land, a little Golden Man, more courageous that the others, resolved to brave death if necessary, and see these wondrous ladies.

So, when evening came and the little Golden Men went back to the Sun Land, this daring little Golden Man crept under a leaf and waited.

The light of the moon could be seen flooding the sky with soft radiance; then she swept over the edge of the world in all her glory. She paused a moment; the silver ladders were let down to the earth and the wonderful little Silver Maidens came down them. They danced and played like happy children, and the little Golden Man could hardly keep from joining in their play. He wondered if there could be anything more beautiful than these maidens. One especially attracted him; as if drawn by his gaze, she grew tired of her play and wandered from the rest. The leaf under which the little Golden Man was hiding made a nook all grass-carpeted. He did not know the light from the Sun Land was still his and made bright his nook. Possibly the light attracted the Silver Maiden; possibly the fame of the little Golden Men had reached the Moon Land. Be that as it may, the little Silver Maid found the little Golden Man, and they were soon friends. He did not dare leave his hiding-place; so, taking a tiny stone, he covered it with moss and made a throne for his guest, and the hours sped happily away.

Suddenly the little Golden Man was startled by familiar voices. He ran to the edge of his shelter and, behold! The earth was flooded with the brilliant light of the sun! The hours had sped so happily they had not heard the call of the Moon Queen. If found, it would mean death to the little Silver Maiden whom he had grown to love more than his life.

During those happy hours, love had entered the heart of the little Silver Maid for the little Golden Man, and now she tried to comfort him. But he would not be comforted. True, he had found the lady of his dreams, but in finding her, he had brought her death. He was willing to die in her place, but that might not be. Was there no way to save her?

A voice answered: "Come to my heart; I have heard your cry and will save you, for you love truly."

Turning, they saw the tiny stone that had been the throne of the little Silver Maiden, opening its heart. Hand in hand they entered and the stone closed protectingly around them.

And this was the first opal; a love stone, holding all the fire of the sun, and the soft beauty of the night."

As I held the gifts in my hand it was needless to look for any written message. In one hand the wondrous butterfly, in the other the glowing opal. "A long life, full of love."

My heart answered: "God grant the wish may be true, and bring him swiftly to me."

But, would I have ever read the message and found the answer to my heart's longing, if Ah Kim had not read for me the message of the Butterfly and the Opal!

THE BIRTH OF THE OPAL.

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

The Sunbeam loved the Moonbeam,
  And followed her low and high,
But the Moonbeam fled and hid her head—
  She was so shy—so shy.

The Sunbeam wooed with passion;
  Ah! he was a lover bold;
And his heart was afire with mad desire
  For the Moonbeam pale and cold.

She fled like a dream before him,
  Her hair was a shining sheen;
And oh! that fate would annihilate
  The space that lay between.

Just as the day lay panting
  In arms of the twilight dim,
The Sunbeam caught the one he sought
  And drew her close to him.

But out of his warm arms started
  And stirred by love's first shock,
She sprang afraid like a trembling maid
  And hid in the niche of a rock.

And the Sunbeam followed and found her
  And led her to love's own feast,
And they were wed on that rocky bed,
  And the dying day was their priest.

And lo! the beautiful Opal—
  That rare and wondrous gem—
Where the Moon and the Sun blend into one
  Is the child that was born to them.

The Colonel's Story. By Forrestine C. Hooker.

AN ARIZONA EPISODE.

DINNER was over, and I followed my host into his den, lighting an excellent cigar which he proffered me, and sinking into a deep leather chair opposite the blazing fire. The room was filled with many souvenirs of days when the colonel had campaigned with Miles, Crook, Lawton, Crawford and other noted Indian fighters of the regular army, but among the many trophies a Henry rifle in excellent condition, which hung above the mantel, most roused my curiosity. I had been told that if one struck a favorable moment the colonel could relate many interesting episodes, but that it was difficult to start him.

Hoping the dinner we had just enjoyed might mellow his reserve, I rose and examined the rifle more closely, then turning said: "It does not look much the worse for wear, colonel, but I suppose it has seen use, or it would not be among these things."

For a couple of minutes he made no reply, merely nodded his head and puffed on his stogie, and I dropped back into my chair regretfully. Just as I was about to broach another topic, he said: "I have never told anyone the story of that rifle, and yet it came near causing an outbreak of two tribes of the Apache Indians, which would have cost the government a heavy sum and kept the soldiers in Arizona jumping like fleas possibly for a year or two, and there is no way of reckoning how many ranchers or travelers would have been victims.

"Have you ever heard of tiswin, or tulapai?" he asked, and when I acknowledged my ignorance, he continued: "It is a drink made by the Apache Indians, and the government uses the most stringent methods to prevent its concoction, for after it has fermented it is a dangerous intoxicant.

"There has been a great deal of legal discussion as to whether tiswin or tulapai, as it is more commonly known among the Apaches, is an alcoholic drink within the meaning of the revenue law. Courts have decided for and against, and Indians have been convicted of violating the internal revenue laws, 'moonshining.' Examination by government experts shows that the liquor usually contains from 2 per cent. alcohol up, but the old Indians insist that in tribal days, before they came in contact with the influence of civilization, tiswin was not an intoxicant but a food. Army officers who are in a position to judge fairly, incline to this belief.

"Now, however, tiswin is seldom made without being adulterated by poisonous roots or vile whisky. When this class of tiswin is drunk to excess, the victim becomes crazed and kills without provocation. It has been asserted that the Indians fast several days previous to indulging in a tiswin spree, but this frequently happened because they had nothing else to nourish them, and in the old days tiswin was used as a food when other supplies fell short.

"It was during the time when Gen. Nelson A. Miles was in command of the Department of Arizona, that the episode connected with that Henry rifle occurred, and with the rifle was associated as a factor an innocent little bed of young, green corn.

"Despite the breaking up of camps where the Indians congregated secretly to make and drink tiswin, the subsequent punishment in military guard-houses of frontier garrisons, the industry flourished in the days of Crook and Miles, and will probably continue to a certain extent among these Indians until they have vanished as a race.

"In 1888 Capt. John L. Bullis, acting Indian agent under the War Department, had authority in minor cases of violation of the revenue laws among the Indians on the San Carlos Reservation, in Southwestern Arizona. Information had been given that Chilchuana, head chief of the Tonto Indians, had dug up the ground under a bunk in his tent, and thus made an excellent forcing bed for the corn he had planted there with which to make tiswin. When detected, the corn was three inches high, just about ready to be used. Whether Chilchuana had been employing this method previously was a mooted question, as he had been indulging in tiswin but the army officers had been unable to discover where he procured it.

"With the discovery of the forcing-bed, Chilchuana was arrested and tried in San Carlos, receiving the sentence of confinement in the guard-house at San Carlos for one year.

"Then arose another problem. The guard-house at San Carlos consisted merely of a square of adobe walls not over ten feet high, and without a vestige of a roof, and hence was hardly adapted to safe-guarding any prisoner, especially an Indian serving a long term almost within speaking distance of his friends. In his quandary, Capt. Bullis consulted the commanding officer of the troops at San Carlos, Capt. Charles L. Cooper, and a report was made regarding conditions to the Department Commander, Gen. Nelson A. Miles, requesting authority to have the sentence carried out at Fort Grant, Arizona, about eighty miles distant from San Carlos.

"Approval being received, Chilchuana was sent to Fort Grant under guard of a troop of cavalry, as it was not improbable that an attempt would be made by members of his tribe to effect his rescue en route. Chilchuana being head chief of the Tonto Apaches, the term of imprisonment in a guard-house was considered the greatest indignity that he could suffer. However, he reached Fort Grant without trouble, and was turned over to the military authorities and entered as a prisoner. Then every one concerned breathed a sigh of relief, knowing that an outbreak of Indians had been warded off.

"Three days after he reached Fort Grant, Chilchuana, with the other prisoners, turned out for reveille call. The guard was drowsy and unsuspecting, and the Indian leaped at him suddenly, knocking him down, then grabbing the soldier's carbine and belt of cartridges, holding those around him at bay, he managed to evade all attempts to intercept him, and dodging among the rocks, made his escape.

"In order to understand how this was possible, one must know that the country around Fort Grant is covered with very high grass growing in bunches, called sacatone, and an Indian can easily conceal himself in these clumps, or among the huge boulders. One of the earliest training 'stunts' of an Apache baby is to learn to drop from sight and lie motionless. So an Indian can escape detection where any other individual would be discovered without trouble. Fort Grant lies against the slope of the Graham Mountains, directly at the base of Mt. Graham, which rises over 10,000 feet above the sea level, and is extremely rugged. The alarm was given at once, and the soldiers started out, hoping to recapture him, but the contour of the country, the Indian's knowledge of the section, the fact of his being afoot while the pursuers were mounted, made the task of the cavalry almost as difficult as putting an elephant into a field to destroy a flea by trampling it.

"Meantime the commanding officer at San Carlos received information that the entire tribe of Apache Indians on the San Carlos Reservation were grealy excited, and had evidently learned through their wireless methods of signals about the escape from Fort Grant. These signals are made by smoke in daytime and fire at night, the flames being smothered by a blanket, in a crude Morse code. An Indian is always on the outlook for any signals, and he, in turn, transmits it to the next watcher, so the message is carried for many miles. Knowing the excitement at San Carlos meant trouble if Chilchuana reached his friends, the commanding officer kept the military wires busy with messages to Fort Grant, warning them not to let the pursuing troops chase Chilchuana toward San Carlos, as it would mean a big Apache outbreak.

"Chilchuana was not caught, and everything apparently quieted down for a while. Then the commanding officer at San Carlos was informed by an Indian who was in the Secret Service, sub rosa, that Chilchuana was back on the San Carlos Reservation. His capture was imperative, for it was apparent he had sneaked back in order to rouse his tribe, and the longer time given him, he more trouble he would be able to brew. The country about Carlos had many caves, which often connected with one another underground, and, besides, here were the cabins of friendly Indians, or those who were compelled through fear to hide the Tonto chief. It would be reported that he was seen in a certain cave, and though he might have slept there the previous night, he slipped away undetected, and the next day all traces of him would be lost, as he was surrounded by faithful spies, who kept him thoroughly posted and warned him of any attempt to rearrest him. The tensity of the situation was keen, since both Capt. Cooper and Capt. Bullis were fully aware of being under a regular system of espionage. Bullis, a man of iron nerve and established daring, going to bed one night, drew down the curtain in a face of a peering Indian, but though immediate investigation followed, there was no clue, and both officers, comparing notes, ruefully confessed that like the policeman in Gilbert and Sullivan's opera, 'their lot was not a happy one.'

"Realizing that it would be impossible to surprise Chilchuana by making a dash on him and his two adherents, a system of secret service work ensued. Days passed, each side seeking the advantage, the officers being badly handicapped by the knowledge that any false move on their part would precipitate a general uprising of the Apaches. Then an incident occurred that altered the aspect of the situation.

"The town of Globe lies about twelve or fifteen miles northwest of the San Carlos agency. I is a mining town, principally copper mines, so the large, canvas-topped wagons pass constantly over the road from Globe to Wilcox and Bowie stations, where the ore is shipped and the wagons return loaded with coke for the smelters.

"A young man of unknown name drove one of these wagons, and camped on the banks of the San Carlos River, returning to Globe. He had evidently purchased a new rifle. After supper he sat by his camp fire and passed the time examining his gun, which was a brand new Henry rifle, made for modern ammunition. A large number of Indians lived near the place where he had camped, and as they came about him, he exhibited his new possession. Guns are always of interest to frontiersmen and Indians, so the rifle was passed about and its new mechanism explained. Then after duly admiring it, the Indians returned it to him, and departed, while he went to bed.

"The next morning he broke camp and started on his way, but had barely made three miles when he was attacked by two of the Indians who had talked to him the night before. After killing him, they took the Henry rifle and ammunition, but nothing else was touched, and though his body was found very shortly, the two murderers had made good their escape.

"This made two separate parties of fugitive Indians, both being hunted by the government. Chilchuana and his party of Tonto Apaches belonged to an entirely different tribe from the two murderers, who were San Carlos Apaches, though all lived on the San Carlos Reservation. Considering that every movement of the commanding officer and the soldiers at Carlos was being reported to the outlaws, it was impossible to employ any ordinary tactics, so the secret service detectives were employed. These were Indians, sometimes men, sometimes women or children, and only the commanding officer and Capt. Bullis knew the identity of these people. There was no danger of these spies disclosing their secret work to their people, since it would have meant death to them. Instructions were given individually, and not one secret service spy knew who another one was, or, in fact, was aware that any other Indian was being employed in the same class of work.

"This game of hide and seek continued for ten days after the killing of the teamster, when the two murderers, evidently concluding it was too strenuous to keep constantly on the qui vive, decided to join Chilchuana and his men, which they did, thus making a party of five outlaw Indians.

"A few days later, the commanding officer, going from his tent toward the agency, noticed a little Indian boy, not over 6 or 7 years old, apparently playing, shooting arrows. The child passed and repassed the officer, who, knowing the Indian ways, watched him intently, believing the youngster was watching to report his actions. Picking up an arrow that fell near Capt. Cooper's feet, the child said softly in English, without looking at the officer, 'Chilchuana says tell you what you do if he help catch two San Carlos Apaches?'

"Without waiting for a reply, the child shot an arrow ahead and ran after it, loitering until the officer approached, though neither appeared cognizant of the other's presence, not knowing how many eyes were upon them. 'Tell Chilchuana if he helps capture the San Carlos Apaches, I promise to write Gen. Miles and have his sentence remitted.'

"The child shot another arrow high in the air, ran after it, then as it fell in the sacatone grass, he vanished completely. The officer had made this promise because it was impossible to catch either of the two parties, and there was constant risk of starting an outbreak that would cost many lives; besides, the offense of Chilchuana was a trivial one compared to the murder, and the civil authorities had demanded the two San Carlos Indians, so the situation was delicate in the extreme.

"Several days elapsed with no message; then as the captain was walking on the parade, an old Indian hag with a bunch of firewood on her shoulders, and leaning heavily on a crude cane, tottered past him. Without turning her head toward the commanding officer, she muttered, 'Chilchuana says you can do,' and hobbled on her way.

"Daily messages were given the commanding officer in this manner, so that he and Capt. Bullis might understand Chilchuana's plans, and be in readiness to co-operate. At last Chilchuana sent word to have ten picked soldiers at a certain point, just before daybreak the next morning, when he, Chilchuana, would try to capture the other Indians, adding instructions to the officer that when a certain signal was given, the soldiers must dash to assist, without loss of time.

"The language of the San Carlos Apaches is entirely different from that of the Tontos, and the tribes are naturally distrustful of each other, so the murderers were constantly on guard, and in order to avoid betrayal by their allies, kept about fifty yards from Chilchuana and his men; while one of the San Carlos Indians would sleep or cook, the other would sit on guard. When the soldiers were stationed as instructed, Chilchuana had already eaten his breakfast and was sitting a little distance apart from the others. One of the murderers was cooking breakfast, while his companion, on watch, squatted cross-legged and smoked a cigarette; across this man's knees reposed the Henry rifle which had been stolen from the teamster.

"Lieut. William E. Shipp and Lieut. Watson, both officers of the Tenth Cavalry, together with Al Sieber, a noted chief of scouts, drew closer with their ten picked soldiers, unseen by the San Carlos Indians, though evidently Chilchuana was aware of their presence. He rose slowly and wandered aimlessly toward the camp fire where the other Indians sat, and in so doing, the Indian with the gun had his back toward the Tonto chief. With a sudden leap, like a wild cat, Chilchuana, though old and very fat, landed on the back of the San Carlos man, gripping his arms tightly so that he could not use the loaded gun. The soldiers dashed forward, but not quick enough to prevent the other San Carlos Indian from seizing a huge butcher knife, with which he leaped on Chilchuana, who was struggling fiercely with the other man, and with a swift movement the knife went into Chilchuana's back, almost emerging through his body, so vicious was the blow.

"Instantly everything was in an uproar. Friends of Chilchuana, who had been concealed in the brush and rocks, rushed from their hiding places and before the soldiers could prevent, had killed the San Carlos Indian who had knifed their chief. The soldiers surrounded the entire bunch, arrested and shackled the murderer, who still held the Henry rifle in his hands, while Chilchuana was sent to the hospital and given every possible care, though the doctor had no hope for his recovery.

"The Indian who killed Chilchuana's assailant was known as Tonto B 14, all Indians being tagged in the different tribes and known only by these tag numbers, as Tonto B 14, etc., because the names as a rule were unintelligible as well as inexpressible.

"A detailed report of the capture was made to Gen. Miles, and Chilchuana's sentence for making tiswin was remitted. He recovered from his wound, and never made any further trouble for the military authorities. The surviving murderer of the teamster was turned over to the civil authorities, taken to Globe, given a fair trial, sent to the Yuma penitentiary, and later was hanged."

Madonna of the Rockies. By Eva Davis Cogswell.

LITTLE BALDFACE.

IT WAS dim dawn far up on the eastern slope of the mountains. A rare light touched the peaks where the snow lay. Only on the greater heights the shadows were beginning to disappear. The nights were bitter with frost; in the days, the snow melted but little, though it was spring, and the mountain wind blowing unchecked was ice-edged and keen. There was no sound but the sound of the wind, everywhere grim silence and gray rock; yet there was life. The solitude was the home of youth and age, and as the light on the mountain peaks moved downward near a cave in the rocks, something moved, and slowly, stately in tread, out from the cave, stalked a she-grizzly with her cub, "The Madonna and Child of the Rockies."

The mother bear was large. Her coat, a dull brown streaked with gray, was thick about her shoulders. Her head, the head of the finest grizzly specimen, was unusually broad at the base with a tapering skull, which peculiar effect was greatly heightened by the short mane that ran backward, over her shoulders. Her perfect teeth, unworn, were formidable, but her forepaws in which lay her great strength were her chief weapons of defense. These were fringed with curved six-inch claws almost as hard as steel.

With the tremendous muscular strength of the shoulders, this creature of the mountain was able with one stroke to lay low and destroy her most formidable adversary. Her swiftness and activity made her invincible to every foe, but man. Of man she had seen but little in the vastness of the region over which she ranged.

The old bear was proud of this cub, as a mother of a child, patiently teaching the toddling cub the things of life. There had been other cubs, but none had ever bred so true. The sire was lord of three mountain ranges, whose domain was uncontested and power undisputed. The hair of the face of this little cub was whitish gray, first point of fine breeding. The whitish gray face gave him a ridiculous and grotesque appearance as a cub, but later when he should have attained his growth it would be a distinct mark of caste and strength.

Everything was new this day to the little cub, for it was his first journey out into the world; and because it was new, he was bewildered and frightened, and swung close to the warm flank of the old she-grizzly. He made hard work of his ramble, there were so many new things to distract a little bear, so many noises strange to his baby ears; so many sights over which he pondered, till his eyes were round with wonder, and his little ears sharpened to catch each new sound; while his little pointed nose dilated and wrinkled itself up, with all the strange new smells he whiffed. All this made the little bear look like a frightened child clinging to his mother's skirts, in the crowded and traffic-laden streets of a city.

The flight of an eagle threw the little bear into a panic, the chatter of the squirrels lower down the mountain and the twitter of the birds filled his little heart with fear, and finally the little cub whimpered, greatly to the old grizzly's disgust; for which she roundly cuffed him, and sent him rolling down the mountain. Quickly as possible the fat cumbersome little toddler regained his feet and ran back, and never again was he, the cub of the white-haired face, that had bred so true to his sire, the lord of three mountain ranges, known to whimper. One of life's lessons had been learned.

Joy and pride swelled the mother's heart; redoubling her care, and guiding and guarding her treasure, with great caution mother and child, the old she-grizzly and her cub, "The Madonna and Child of the Rockies" started on again down from the altitudes, nearer to the foothills, nearer to the invincible foe, nearer the haunts of man.

Never off her guard, the old bear tested the air of her advance continually. Not that she feared for herself, but because for a time at least not even a thought of evil to the cub could she tolerate. No longer was the cub afraid; back again beside his mother, he crowded a little closer to the big bulk, which meant so much to him—strength, protection, food and warmth.

On this journey an old sire of their kind was encountered in his own domain. Lifting himself up, he gave warning of his nearness, and seeing that a she-grizzly approached with her cub, he offered no attack, and the she-grizzly, conscious of the sincerity of this act, made a detour in her journey. This brought her over a tangle of wood, boulders of rock, uprooted trees, which of course was not difficult for the mother bear, but for the toddling cub it was hard. The she-grizzly with this wonderful cub to guide made a slower stride, proceeding with greater caution, hoping to reach her favorite feeding pasture by night. Of this choice range the old she-grizzly had always been queen by right of conquest over those who sought to share it. Her nature was morose; companionship irritated her except when desiring her mate. The long journey had made the little cub very hungry, and once on the road he wanted to nurse. His mother pushed him aside, with a cuff which tumbled the little fellow over. The old bear paid slight attention to his fall. The little son picked himself up and ran after her. Finally, having given the cub a second lesson, the old grizzly, coming to a favorite spot which proved good pasture, stopped and let the cub suck. After this, she killed for herself a bird, with a slight slap of her paw. The cub caught at the wing, and with growling, showing of teeth, he dared the whole world, which to him was his mother, to take it from him. Afterward they lay down in the thicket to sleep. The cub curled up beside the old she-grizzly, and thus ended his first journey out into his mother's world.

Here the mother established a nursery in the land of pasturage for her little son far from his sire's domain up in the highest altitudes, where was safety and solitude, and where the little cub was born.

Soon the cub put off the ways of a cub, and became less timid. Knowing that the cautious mother was near at hand at all times, the little bald-face came to feel a contempt for life other than his own, and he lorded it like a young prince of the realm.

He learned the taste of red meat. His wonderful mother had killed a deer. This was the first time he had seen his mother in action; he himself had never known the need of action. However, an event of his life was approaching. A poacher came, a she-grizzly with two cubs; she was soon overborne, thought each fought valiantly. Never before had little bald-face seen such deadly conflict, and with a savage squeal he charged the two cubs. The two little bears fled bawling down the mountains, filled with amazement and temerity. Amazed at the stillness of their mother, that she raised not herself in their defense, they learned one sad lesson of life, tumbling and rolling from cliff to cliff, pursued by little bald-face, who on recovering himself remembered that he was wandering far from the scene and returned to his mother, and in the thicket they lay proudly down to sleep—a conquering mother and a little bald-face that had bred so true.

Old grizzly's wounds were superficial, and the next day gave little trouble. Then she began her excursion into the world with her cub; the cub, no longer afraid to venture, often went a hundred yards or more from his mother.

On one of these occasions a strange scent struck his nose. It was the smell of human blood, of human life, but no such scent had been granted him before. He stopped, and determined it was hostile. He hesitated, and feared it by instinct; all he knew was, the scent came from the direction where he had left his mother ranging. He waited, and soon, very near him, and coming toward him, was an animal. It appeared to walk on its hind legs, to raise its forelegs, and these forelegs held a round black stick. At first afraid, the cub became horror-stricken. Instinct warned him, and yielding to fear, he cried for his mother, as a child might cry, and, terrified, ran, in the wrong way, running from the old grizzly who had been all he knew of protection.

As the cry of the cub came to this strange animal, a man, a hunter, he turned toward the cub, but He who protects the weak, the God of all life stayed his arm. Suddenly a wicked roar rang out from the grizzly who had heard her cub's call, and with a crash of the underbrush the old bear dashed out of the bushes. The man now faced a deadly foe, the greatest peril of the mountains. She was almost upon him, but his aim was true, sharp and rapid; he fired three times, and the last shot went home. The old she-grizzly rose and fell, and rose and fell again, trying to plunge forward, showing her teeth and her intent, but when she went down for the last time, tearing away the ground, she lay and roared her life away, and soon all was still, almost as still as the vast solitudes above among the peaks.

The stillness encouraged little bald-face to return within a few yards, and sitting up, he regarded the enemy, fearfully, wistfully, so wistfully that the rifle was lowered, and man the intruder gazing on little bald-face with admiration, slowly backed down and down the mountain leaving the little cub alone.

Little bald-face cried in whimpers that almost seemed to possess the sentiment of human hearts, as if understanding the tragedy and what had befallen him. He shuffled down the mountain unhappy and alone, the little bald-face cub who had bred so true.

In the Final Analysis. By Dix Drummond Osmun.

FATHER.

THE maid had served the black coffee and silently withdrawn. Mr. Marsden left his untouched. He arose heavily from the table.

"At your convenience," he said, his always quiet tone freighted with an unusual significance, "I would like to see all of you in the library."

Mrs. Marsden withdrew her eyes from the round-shouldered, retreating figure of her husband and looked at her two daughters in annoyance.

"I do hope he isn't going to fuss about the bills," she said petulantly. "I don't see what has ailed your father of late. He is positively unreasonable!"

"Maybe he's crabby about our wanting to go to Lenwood for the summer. You know he kicked about the expense last year," suggested Mabel, with a reflection of her mother's tone.

"Or our 'party dresses,' as he calls them," put in Helen, in deep disgust. "I'm just a little sick of it, myself. It's one money row after another in this house. I call it a disgrace."

"We must be careful," warned the mother. "You know how hard he is to handle. I don't know what he wants to say, but we must be careful not to make him angry or we may all spend the summer here in Ridgedale."

"If you were not so afraid of him," said Helen, suppressing a yawn, "we would not have such a hard time. Other women talk up to their husbands, and get what they want."

"We get what we want in the end," returned Mrs. Marsden, complacently, "though I have to work harder for it—a great deal harder than I should. But you must admit we have the finest place in town, and the most expensive machine, to say nothing of our clothes. Considering the material I have to work on, I think I have done remarkably well."

"Maybe you have," answered Helen indifferently, "at any rate, we will not quarrel about it. What you you suppose the row tonight will be about?"

"Lenwood," snapped Mabel. "You sprang it too soon, Helen, and bungled as usual. You both know"—she looked from her sister to her mother accusingly—"that I can manage him better than either of you, being the youngest and the 'baby' of the family. But you never wait for me to take the initiative—and of course I have to suffer by your mistakes."

"Girls, girls!" cried their mother in quick alarm. "Don't let us quarrel among ourselves, or we will never accomplish anything."

She arose from the table.

"Once more," said Helen wearily, "we'll beard the dragon in his lair, or the lion in his den, or whatever the quotation is. Come along, let's get through with it."

"More like the donkey in his stall," remarked her sister, a sullen expression on her otherwise pretty face. "He's just about as stubborn as a mule."

Mrs. Marsden swept out of the perfectly-appointed dining-room, followed by her two daughters, and moved across the wide hall.

Mr. Marsden greeted their entrance into the library with a grim smile. He rose and waited until they were seated. Then he walked to the window and looked out a moment before he turned and faced them. His seamed face was hard, his eyes cold and his mouth curved downward in a harsh line. He looked—what everybody said he was—a heartless money-grubber. It would have taken a deeper student of human nature than any of the three women to have seen something else in his features, to have noted the sadness in the eyes, the pathos of the deeply-lined visage, the patience concealed by the rigid lines of the tired mouth.

"Today," he began, when they were seated, "I am 50 years of age. I have for some time intended to have this talk with you on my fiftieth birthday."

There were three polite exclamations of dismay.

"Do forgive us, Henry," cried his wife. "We were so busy that we completely forgot——"

He interrupted her with a gesture.

"It pleases my fancy," he resumed, "to show you a photograph of myself taken at the age of 30—twenty years ago. You remember this picture, Margaret?" He handed it to her.

She glanced at the photograph and passed it along to one of her daughters, stealing a half-frightened glance at him.

"You are very strange tonight, Henry," she remarked. "I—why are you showing us this picture?"

He ignored his wife's words. "You can see," he went on, "that I was rather a good-looking young fellow. The face shows that I was happy and optimistic, generous. In fact, I enjoy looking at that photograph. I am rather proud of myself as I was at that time."

One of his daughters gazed out over the lawn with a bored expression on her face, the other studied the rug in no less bored abstraction. His wife's expression shifted between coldness and fear—fear of she scarcely knew what.

She shook herself together. "Really, Henry," she said, elevating her eyebrows, "if you have nothing more to say than mere reminiscing——"

"I have," he interrupted her with a curious smile.

Mrs. Marsden did not like the smile. She hastened onto another tack.

"You were a handsome man then, Henry," she said with assumed gentleness. "You would be now if you took more care of your dress. You are positively shabby."

Marsden caught up the remark.

"I am shabby—I know it. However, I mean to change—and in other particulars as well."

A rustle of hopeful interest ran from one to another of the three women. They looked at him expectantly.

"Being fifty years of age," he went on without apparently noticing their changed attitude, "I can claim to be an old man and ask your indulgence if I go back over my past life."

"Certainly, dear," cooed his wife.

THE WONDER STONE.

A CERTAIN family lived near the mouth of a river for several years, but the fish getting scarce, they thought it better to move farther up where food was plentiful, caribou being found occasionally.

It required courage to move up this river and go inland where the Evil Spirit dwelt, and where wolves prowled about at night, ready to seize and devour anything to satisfy their appetites.

Many stories had they heard of the Evil Spirit changing hunters into dogs and wild beasts! Many of the bravest hunters had never returned from that mysterious inland country!

But go they must. They would die of starvation if they remained where they were! The children, a boy and girl, must not starve! So, one night, after a very serous talk, serious indeed, as there was nothing left to eat, they concluded to start early in the morning, hoping to find a chance while on their way to shoot a nice fat ptarmigan with the bow and arrow.

In the early morning the girl awakened her brother, and they started on ahead, with their bow and arrows ready to kill anything in the shape of a bird, or spear a salmon with the sharp-pointed arrow that was used for such purposes.

The father and mother took their tent and loaded their few cooking untensils on a small hand-sled and started on the trail of their children. A light snow had fallen in the night, and the foot-prints could be easily followed. No tracks of animals or birds could be seen in the snow, and the parents grew uneasy as the day wore away, and their hunger increased.

At last the children's footprints turned abruptly away from the river, and the distance between the tracks was longer, as if they had started to run after something, or away from it.

The parents followed the footprints for a long distance away from the river, until they came to a spot that was covered with caribou tracks, and their children's footprints could no longer be seen amongst them. A close search was made and a fox's tracks were seen also, but no signs of the children.

It looked as if they had been taken on the backs of the caribou and carried away. The fox-track was a large one and could be seen first on one side and then on the other, as if it had been herding the deer and driving them along.

The parents followed the broad trail until it could no longer be seen in the darkness, and then camped, waiting for morning, to take it up again, but to their great grief and sorrow, a heavy snow had fallen in the night, and all traces were covered and lost! They followed in the direction which the trail had been leading, but the snow grew deeper, and more began to fall, so they could no longer travel, and they had to give it up!

They were very hungry. They went back to the river, which was not very far off, it having taken a turn in its course. They cut a hole in its frozen surface, and in a short time, to their gratification, caught a large salmon trout with their sinew line and bone fish-hook. The fish was soon cooked and eaten, but their hearts were sore for their lost children.

They determined to build an igloo here and remain until the children were found. Every day the father went to look for them, but the search was in vain. All the winter passed and summer came again but no trace of their loved ones.

There was no lack of food. The river contained many fish of several varieties and there were many ptarmigan along its banks waiting to be snared.

What had become of their children? Were they dead?

As the children went along in the early morning, the boy held his bow and arrow handy in case a ptarmigan should fly up in front of them, but nothing was to be seen until late in the day, and then the girl saw several caribou on a hill, quite a long distance from the river. They did not like to leave the river, but hunger is a hard master, and they concluded to go after them. The caribou went out of sight over the hill and the children started on a run, thinking to get close to them over the top, and they did. In fact, they got right into the whole herd which were lying down just over the brow.

Now a strange thing happened. There was an old red fox keeping guard over the herd. As they came up to them the red fox ran at them, snarling and showing his teeth. The boy attempted to fix an arrow to his bow, when he noticed that his hands were cloven hoofs. His whole body was covered wih hair. His sister was changing into a caribou in front of his eyes.

He now could understand why the red fox was snarling. He also could understand why the caribou were bleating. He, too, had been changed into a caribou!

"Don't run so fast," snarled the red fox. "You will disturb the herd."

"We were only playing," said the sister, but it was not his sister's voice that the boy heard. He was astonished. He asked his sister if she had a cold that made her voice so hoarse, and the sound that he made was worse than hers. He was bleating also!

"Be quiet or I will bite you," snarled Red Fox.

This made them afraid, as Red Fox showed his sharp teeth and snarled fiercely at them.

The boy looked for his bow and arrows but could not see them anywhere, but did see the nice, sweet moss that was under his nose, and he began to eat, at the same time noticing that his sister was already engaged in the same pleasant occupation.

They were very hungry and had no time for any talking until they were filled, and then there came another surprise, When they lay down on the soft moss to rest after eating, their food came back in mouthfuls up their throats, tasting delicious! And they had the pleasure of eating it again with a better appetite. They wondered how it was that they had never known what nice food moss made. It was delightful. They would never eat fish again. The boy rubbed his antlers against his sister's back to show his pleasure and she in turn, rubbed noses with him.

After they had eaten all they needed, they began to look around and saw a large number of caribou in the herd, and it seemed as if they were divided into families, for wherever there was a male caribou, there were several females gathered around him. Some of the old males looked very fierce, and the boy made up his mind to keep away from their antlers.

While this was passing through his mind, he saw Red Fox get up and shake himself, and all the caribou jumped up and stood looking at him as if waiting for his orders.

"Go home," snarled Red Fox, and an old caribou took the lead, the rest following closely at his heels.

The boy was so interested in watching all this that he waited until all had passed him, when he was suddenly awakened by a sharp bite on his leg that made him crowd up into the herd pretty lively.

He got too close to an old male, who struck him in the side with his fore leg and his ribs felt as if one or two were broken. This made him keep his eyes open on both sides, and he soon saw that Red Fox kept a sharp outlook for stragglers on the sides as well as behind, and he forced his way into a family group of young caribou, where he found his sister in their midst and he kept close to her for the rest of the way to the caribou's home.

They stopped occasionally, while Red Fox ran ahead, as if to reconnoiter, and started again when he barked. There was not a bleat from any in the herd, which made the sister inquisitive and she bleated to a female next to her, asking why they were so silent and received a kick for an answer. It seemed that Red Fox permitted no bleating while traveling.

They went on until it became too dark to see, and then Red Fox snarled a halt, and all began to eat the nice moss that was growing here in abundance. This suited the children, and no time was wasted until they were filled, and then they lay down and ate it all over again.

During the night snow fell heavily, but to their surprise it made them feel warmer when they were covered with it. When it began to grow light, Red Fox snarled for them to get up and eat, which they did. They had been wondering where their breakfast was to be found, as the ground was covered deeply with snow, and no moss in sight, and now came another surprise. When they arose they saw all the caribou digging with their front feet into the snow, throwing it out behind them in thick clouds. Then they understood.

Down into the snow they went, digging with their sharp hoofs, and in a very short time reached that delicious moss. How they did enjoy it. They did not want hands or fingers now. The sharp hoofs were just the things to have when they wanted their appetizing food. How strange it was that they had never eaten it before. How could they have preferred fish and meat.

They saw Red Fox jumping through the snow and into the holes made by the caribou, and they watched to see if he would eat the moss. No! He was not after moss! He was catching mice! The caribou pulled up the moss and uncovered the mice and Red Fox ate them! How could he eat such things in preference to that nice moss!

In a short time Red Fox snarled his marching orders, and off they went, but they noticed that he kept in the rear now, to avoid the deep snow. They traveled nearly all day, arriving at last at what looked like a large pile of rocks, but which proved to be a very large cave in the side of the mountain.

They went around on the left side and saw a valley with trees growing in it, and while they were admiring it (they had never seen trees,) to their great terror, a huge black bear came out of the entrance to the cave and growled at them!

"Who are you?" he growled.

"We are two children," they answered.

"They are mine," snarled Red Fox. "You leave them alone!"

To the great surprise of the children the black bear seemed afraid of Red Fox! His fierce manner changed into one of submission and he slunk back into the cave.

"Come in here," snarled Red Fox to the children, and they followed him into the cave, where they were again in terror of their lives! There was a large number of animals of different kinds sitting around the carcasses of several caribou that had just been killed. There were the fierce wolves that were not afraid of man. And there was a large lynx, with his green eyes glaring at them. How their hearts were beating as all eyes were upon them when Red Fox led them into the circle of fierce animals! There were many other kinds besides the bears, wolves, and the lynx. There were marten, wolverine, otter, porcupine, woodchuck, weasel, squirrel and mice, all feeding on the dead caribou.

"I see that you have enough meat for today, so I will take these two out again," snarled Red Fox.

"Come out. We will not eat you today," and with their knees so weak that they could hardly stand, the children followed him out.

"Go down into the valley and stay there until I come after you. If you try to escape you will be caught by the wolves that surround the trees, and they will eat you," he snarled.

They did as they were bidden, and soon found that Red Fox had told the truth about the wolves, for just as they were entering into the forest they saw many of them prowling around outside. They ran far in to get as much distance between themselves and their dangerous enemies as possible, and sank to the ground with fear and weakness. There was no hope of escape from this place that was so well guarded.

They recovered their strength after resting a little while, and began eating the moss, but there was something else that they had not tasted before. In taking up a large bite, a twig of a tree got into the girl's mouth and it tasted fine. She bleated the good news to her brother, and he tried it also. It was good!

Now they had a change of food that pleased their appetites very much. They went about in the forest, tasting the different grasses, and everything was good.

They found several snug hiding-places that would come in handy in case of danger from enemies that might be seeking their lives. There was one in some dense undergrowth that was higher than their heads, very hard for them to get through its outer edge, having a clear space inside, with a small brook running through it.

By leaping over some narrow places they could get inside and leave an almost impenetrable hedge for smaller animals than themselves, which made it a safe place to hide in for several weeks if necessary. They had been in the forest several days, during which time they had not seen or heard any other animals, so they concluded to make a search of the whole of it.

What a nice place this forest was for a home! What lovely grassy spots there were in the open places they sometimes passed through! And those small streams of sparkling water! And the tall trees that spread out their protecting arms over their heads as they went along! Oh, what a lovely place!

Hark! What sound was that? The howl of a wolf! They were getting near the edge of the forest! Away they ran in fear of their lives. Back into the deep forest. Hark! There was the bark of Red Fox! Right ahead of them! They turned to the right and ran into some dense undergrowth, a little higher than their heads. They leaped high over it as far as they could and landed in a small clear place that was entirely shaded by the branching trees that grew all around.

It was a splendid hiding-place! They could not be seen by Red Fox. They heard him snarling to some animal to move along quickly. "Hurry! I want to find two more caribou to feed my family!"

They hardly dared to breathe. Red Fox was looking for them!

"I looked for them yesterday, but could not find them," he snarled.

They heard what he snarled, and their knees trembled so that they could hardly stand. Red Fox passed on, but they remained silent for a long time, in fear of their lives. He might return!

Three days passed, and they had to go in search of water, as there was none in their hiding-place. They kept in the darkest part of the forest, where the trees and undergrowth were thickest, and at last found a splendid hiding-place, with a beautiful spring of water in it. It was surrounded by many trees, and the undergrowth was so thick that they could get through only by leaping over it in great bounds, trampling down a spot to make other leaps as they went into the clear place in the center. No Red Fox could get through that brush.

Several days passed, but no sound was heard other than the rustling of the leaves and branches of the trees in the wind. They thought they might go out and be safe if they kept in the shade of the trees, so out they went on the opposite side from where Red Fox had passed, and it was well they did so, as they found out later on. There was a trail on the side where Red Fox had been, and by going out on the opposite side their tracks could not be seen by him if he came that way again. They kept a sharp lookout on all sides, not knowing what dangerous animal might be lying in wait for them.

Many days went by in peace and quietness, until at last, one evening, just as they were about to return to their home place, a noise came from some very dense undergrowth that sounded as if there were several animals forcing their way through the brush. They listened to the noise for a while, and soon heard the growling of several bears. Then Red Fox was heard snarling at them to go ahead. The bears kept growling, but the children could not make out what they were growling about, until one gave a sharp growl that could be heard plainly enough.

"You need not bite me so hard. I am doing the best I can. I have been breaking down this undergrowth all day, and I'm tired," he growled.

"You are all too lazy. If you don't find those caribou you will get no supper," snarled Red Fox.

The children ran as lightly as they could to get into their safe hiding-place. But would it BE SAFE? It would be safe this time because the bears were not coming this way now, but which way would they come tomorrow? Red Fox had a keen nose, and might smell them out. What could they do to get away from him? The bears could break down their hedge and they would be caught and killed!

Ha! The girl thought of a good plan. They would go into the place where the bears had already been. It was not likely that they would search the same place again.

This seemed a wise plan, so early in the

The Treasure of the Cazonci.

By Maria de Galeana.

THE OLD PARCHMENT.

"HAD then the Cazonci, from his ancestors, much gold and silver in jewels, of shields and armlets and half-moons and breastplates and earrings—forty chests, twenty of gold and twenty of silver—dedicated to the feasts of their gods—he also had in another part called Yehecheniremba a great quantity; he had likewise in an island called Apupato, ten chests of fine silver in shields, in each chest 200 shields and miters for the captives that were sacrificed and 1600 garments of green feathers, (for) Curicaveri; as many more for the goddess Zaratanga and more for her son Manovapa forty shields of rich plumage and forty of the plumage of the papagayo; he had likewise in another house, other ten chests of shields, in each chest 200 shields—and 4700 garments of green feathers. In another island called Xanecho he had eight chests of silver shields and miters of gold—in each chest a hundred shields—dedicated to the moon."

The hoot of an owl in a near-by tower startled Concha as she bent over the yellow parchment. It was only a fragment; the complete document, made by one of the earliest Spanish friars, hangs in the Escorial.

Concha drew her black shawl closer about her head and over her face so as to partially conceal it. She bade her old nurse Tomasa to draw nearer with the tallow candle, and again studied the parchment.

"Likewise, he had in another island called Pacandan four chests of shields of fine silver, a hundred shields to every chest and twenty shields of fine gold that were scattered among the chests, in each chest five. There were there the guardians, and from father to son descended as an inheritance the guarding of this treasure, and there was the greatest treasure of all."

The owl hooted again, this time nearer. Concha glanced nervously at the portrait of that last Tarascan Emperor, "El Cazonci," that hung on the wall of the old ex-convent, of whose treasures she was reading and of whom the old document said: "And Guzman gave sentence against the Cazonci, who was dragged alive at the tail of a horse and was burned—and his servants recovered his ashes—and interred them."

The old painting seemed to the vivid imagination of Concha to be alive. The face of the last Cazonci appeared to bend from the heavy gilding of the frame that surrounded it and take on life. The hooting of the owl in the near-by church tower was answered by another from the old monastery.

"Thou art very venturesome to come here, and above all at night," warned old Tomasa. "Only because I am fond of thee and want thee to wed Pascual, did I consent to accompany thee tonight in these crazy doings. It would be our ruin if this were discovered. Thy father would never forgive me for allowing thee to come here, and thy marriage to Pascual would be postponed till the crack of doom." Old Tomasa had carried Concha in her arms to the baptismal font and took the liberty of an old servant in scolding her roundly. "I am going to blow out the light of the candle and let us see if we can find our way out from this labyrinth of rooms and corridors, now that Jose, the gatekeeper, is gone. I only hope the bribe thou gavest him be sufficient to keep his mouth shut. I do not see what thou hast found in that old piece of skin to make thee take such a risk. No respectable young woman would come to a young men's college, and thy reputation would be gone forever if it were known that thou camest at this unholy hour. Thou art a very perverse child and wilt bring disgrace on us both."

Old Tomasa went mumbling and muttering under her breath, preceding her young mistress, who followed her in silence and herself wondered how she had had the courage for the undertaking. They stumbled through now empty recitation-rooms out into a wide court, bathed in full-moon light. Here cobble stones took on an unwonted luster. Concha and Old Tomasa shrank up close to the wall where shadows fell thickest in the corridors. They went through a passageway out into another court; this one was paved with great, smooth flagstones. Trees and flowers broke, with their shadows, the intense white of the lunar light reflected on the stone pavement. The massive, iron-spiked door of the huge zaguan swung noisily on its strong hinges as they emerged into the silent street. The owls answered each other from neighboring towers. Concha shivered and drew more closely her black shawl about her, at the same time she kept near Old Tomasa, who had now become silent. It seemed to Concha that the Cazonci must be alive and following her. His eyes had looked at her from the gilded frame while she read of his wealth that had incited the cupidity of his conquerors and led to his torture. That wealth, so enormous; and Pascual, so poor! Might there not be some of that ancient wealth still hidden and might not Pascual find it? It would be rightfully his, for Pascual was lineal descendant of the last Emperor called "El Cazonci." In the little old Indian village of Tarimbaro existed another parchment on which Pascual and all of his ancestors since the time of the Spanish conquest had written their names. They were proud of their ancient lineage; proud of their Indian blood. Pascual's blond curls shook with the energy of his emotions and his blue eyes sparkled when he remembered his ancestry and exclaimed: "If I knew where, in what part of my veins, was that drop of Spanish blood, I would tear open my veins and spill it." But then Pascual was impetuous, with the impetuosity of youth, and given to exaggeration. Concha loved him and pitied him—and herself also—in direct ratio to Don Castulo's dislike. Pascual was only a newly-fledged engineer, with no fortune. Don Castulo was wealthy. Pascual had given, so far, no evidence of genius greater than that of many other young men. Time was when an engineer perforce commanded much attention and some honor simply because he was an engineer; they were so rare. Now engineers were nearly as common as lawyers, doctors and priests, and every other boy you met, on being questioned as to what career he had chosen for life, would answer: "An engineer." So Pascual was without honor in his own birthplace, and especially so with the honorable gentleman he wished ardently to make his father-in-law. Concha seconded Pascual bravely in wishing to confer the title on her obdurate parent. While she was not strictly forbidden to meet Pascual in the balcony of evenings and whisper ardent promises and silly nothings through iron bars while he obstructed the way to passers-by, at the same time he held her slim white hand in full view of all who wished to see, they both knew that Pascual's suit was frowned upon by Concha's stern parent, who did not demand a fortune for his daughter, but did demand, and that very decidedly, that he show ample ability and means to care for the daughter of his heart and her children. Concha wept many tears and wasted many vain pleadings. "But, Papacito," she would plead, "Pascual is so talented!"

"I fail to see his talent," fumed Don Castulo testily, "except in making thee to lose thy silly head. He has not even enough for the wedding ceremony, let alone setting up a household and maintaining a family; and there are the children that are sure to come, and the servants, and the expenses. No, no, my daughter. Cease to waste thy time in vain over Pascual. Wealthy suitors are not lacking to thee. Why not listen to them? I like not blond men; to me they seem effeminate, and I think thy Pascual only good enough to play the bear* to silly maidens. Let him get to work and cease to bother around here."

"Papa has a heart so hard, Pascualito mio," murmured Concha that evening in Pascual's ear pressed close to the iron bars so that Don Castulo should not hear. "I know thou art more intelligent than any other, and such a worker! Let us see. Next week thou art to go and survey the lands for the Indians beyond Patzcuaro, verdad?"

"Yes, I went over to look over the ground a few days ago. It is strange about those ruins at Janicho. It is said they were made by their ancestors—and mine. You know about that stupid custom in my family of inscribing our names on that old piece of parchment in Tarimbaro. Well, over at Janicho the other day the old Indian who stands to them for their chief, or Presidente, as he saw me observing the mysterious ruins and proving for my own satisfaction, with my instruments, their exact geometrical lines and proportions, looked wise, but immediately became silent when I laughingly said perhaps the Spanish conquerors had overlooked part of the treasure of the Cazonci and that it might be buried in one of the pyramids. There is an old document in San Nicolas—but there, Conchita mia, it behooves me to make a few thousands, and that quickly, so we may marry." The conversation lapsed into the meaningless nothings of lovers. Passers-by smiled comprehendingly at the nearness of Concha's and Pascual's heads—with the iron bars between.

Footsteps sounded on the tile flooring of the patio. Concha cast uneasy glances in the direction of the door through which she might reasonably expect her watchful father to appear at any moment. "I hear footsteps. Perhaps it is my papa. Ay, what a hard heart he has for so good a parent! What did you say, Pascualito mio, about an old writing about the treasure? In San Nicolas? That there is nothing in it? No? Fly, my father comes!"

Concha and Old Tomasa stole silently in through a side door and tiptoed across patios until Concha's room was reached without arousing any of the household except the mozo who slept in the zaguan but who was too lazy to get up and see who was prowling about at midnight. Old Tomasa helped her young mistress undress, disapproval written all over her faithful countenance and discernable in her cautious whispers. After she had retired, Concha sat up in bed, turned on the light, and drew from her gown the piece of parchment. "It should rightfully be in possession of my Pascual," she mentally excused herself for having taken it. "I hope they will not miss it." She read: "In another island called Xanecho (Janicho) he had eight chests of silver shields and miters of gold—in another Island called Vrasni another treasure of gold in jewels——"

Again in imagination Concha saw the face of the Cazonci lean from its gilded frame. She continued to read in the quaint Spanish of the early friar how "The Lord of Mexico called Moctezuma—has sent us and told us to go to our brother the Cazonci—"

The reading of the old piece of parchment was difficult; its antiquated phraseology and spelling and the angular characters in which it was written made it difficult for Concha to understand. Only her love for Pascual armed her for the task.

At times the Cazonci seemed to lean his dark face from the gilded frame and help her. Could it be that a part of the treasure of the Tarascan emperors might still be hidden? And, if so, where?

When Pascual last leaned against the iron bars of Concha's window previous to going on the surveying expedition to Janicho, as he fervently pressed Concha's right hand she drew from her latest Paris gown a yellow parchment and thrust it in Pascual's face. At her gesture of command he quenched a desire to whistle, and listened to the story of how she had possessed herself of it, and her faith that somewhere on the island of Janicho was still hidden a part of the treasure of the Cazoncis. Pascual had not much faith in the finding of any treasure. Still, he granted, he might be willing to look for it if the thing could be done without arousing the suspicion and consequent opposition of the Indians. He spread out the parchment and together, by the faint light, they studied it. A faint tracing at the bottom attracted Pascual's attention. "That looks to be one of the pyramids and that seems to be stairs leading down into what might be an underground passage. Unless that passage opens on the shore of the lake—wait; there is a small cave on the shore of the lake on the opposite side of the usual landing-place. I have noted something strange about that cave when I have entered it. It did not look entirely natural; it may have been made, or altered, for a purpose."

"It is of no use, my daughter. Give up all thought for that good-for-nothing of a Pascual. No, I have nothing against his character, but he is as poor as a beggar; and no daughter of mine can marry to bring misfortune on herself and her children. Thou knowest that Pascual cannot hope to save enough on which to marry for many a year. at random) our twenty-fifth line.
Meanwhile, here art thou, tempting as a flower and not lacking rich suitors. If thou wert not so perverse thou wouldst already be wedded, and I a grandfather. Here is Don Pedro Gutierrez, bachelor, seasoned, past the age for dissipation, rich; all that could be wished in a son-in-law; he desires to marry thee."

"But not all that could be wished in a husband, Papacito," responded Conchita with spirit. "He is old, fat, ugly, and if he now has no vices he has had them. Marry him? Never! You will see that Pascual—" But Concha spoke to empty air. Don Castulo had angrily betaken himself from the room. Concha wept.

The canoe that carried Pascual skimmed the surface of the lake under the skilled strokes of its owner. He was an Indian boy whom Pascual had known many years. Perhaps they had been schoolmates; at least they had both attended the same school. The Indian youth was dignified, alert, well educated.

"Rememberest thou that actually I am one of thy race?" questioned Pascual.

The Indian boy silently nodded.

"Well, I am going to survey and explore part of my ancient inheritance," laughed Pascual. The Indian boy listened as Pascual spread out the parchment; his countenance was as eager and animated as Pascual's when they landed on the opposite shore and sought the little cave. Stones nearly closed the entrance.

"I made careful note of the direction and relative positions of the two pyramids and the walls of the quadrangular enclosure the last time I was here," said Pascual, "for these curious ruins interested me. Let us see if this cave has any connection with any subterranean passage." They bent over the parchment and studied it together. An examination of the inner walls of the cave disclosed no secret. They were about to leave in disgust when an exclamation from the Indian boy caused Pascual to turn. The boy had rolled a large stone from its resting place of 500 years, in the floor of the cave. Below the stone was a tracing similar to the one on the parchment. Pascual pressed on the stone. It moved slightly. He pressed harder. The stone moved more. Under the combined pressure of the two young men the apparent solid flooring of the cave gradually gave way. A large, circular piece swung downward and sidewise displaying to their gaze a dim chamber below. They looked at each other in wonderment and awe. "They placed all of them on their heads wreaths of clover and painted their faces with yellow—and went all the people that, in life, had served the Cazonci and others his servants wished to go and said they had eaten of his bread and perhaps their other Lord that was to be would not treat them so well—and so they filled the patio of the sacrificial temple—and they (others) beat with clubs all those people who had previously been made drunk and they buried them behind the temple—with all the jewels they carried—" Pascual ceased reading and replaced the parchment. They descended.

"And they placed (in the tomb) a large garment of rich plumage very rich and long and green and rings for the ears of gold and necklaces of turquoises and armlets of gold very finely woven and his hunting shields of leather and his bows and arrows and a garment of the skin of the tiger, and all his women wailed and wept for him—and all those who were to die with him—took with them necklaces of turquoises and breastplates of gold and armlets of gold and golden cascabeles on their legs—"

Pascual and his companion had provided themselves with an abundance of pitch-pine sticks for torches. They found themselves in a natural chamber several feet in diameter. In its opposite side was an opening. They entered, through this opening, an underground passage. They lighted torches and held them above their heads. The passageway lowered as they advanced and they found their progress slow and difficult. After what seemed a long time to them, after their torches had many times been extinguished and they had been obliged to crawl through the passage where it narrowed so as hardly to admit the body of a morning they left their home place and went to where the bears and Red Fox had been quarreling. It was a good place in which to hide, but there was no open place. They would have to squeeze into the brush if an enemy should make an appearance.

While they were investigating, a noise was heard off to one side, and they promptly hid themselves. There was a peculiar smell to this undergrowth that pleased them very much, because it would prevent Red Fox from smelling them.

Hark! What is that? It is the bears again! They are coming close! There! That is Red Fox snarling at them to hurry!

Oh! How the children trembled! How their hearts beat! The bears passed by very close to them, and Red Fox came after! He had something hanging under his neck from a string, and just as he was in front of them, it caught on some undergrowth and, the string breaking, it fell on the ground, but he did not miss it.

On the bears went, and soon the children could hear them breaking down the brush ahead, where they had left off the night before. Red Fox kept them busy, snarling at and biting them when he thought they were slow in their work.

"I will have you killed and eaten tonight when you go home if you don't work better than you are doing, and stop your growling," snarled Red Fox.

"How long are you going to keep us breaking down this undergrowth?"

"Until those two caribou are found, even if the whole forest must be searched," answered Red Fox.

"Well, if that is the case, I won't work any more," growled a bear.

"I won't either," growled another.

"Go to work!" snarled Red Fox, and he bit a bear on the leg as he snarled.

"How do you like that?" growled the bear that was bitten, as he struck Red Fox and knocked him into the brush. All the bears then ran at Red Fox and would have killed him if he had not made his escape as quickly as he did. He was astonished! They were not afraid of him! He felt of his neck, and for the first time missed the string that had been around it. Now he knew why they were no longer afraid of him. He had lost his power over them!

He ran away as fast as he could go with the bears in chase. The brush was very thick all around except where it had been broken down by the bears, and there were two bears between him and safety! Three others were behind, and he had to dodge pretty lively to keep away from their vicious slaps.

At last, after considerable dodging, he got past the two bears on the trail, and away he went. He saw the children as he passed, but it was too late for him. They were not afraid of him. He had lost his power over them, but they did not understand how this had happened.

The bears came lumbering along after Red Fox, but luckily, they were too eager to catch him to have time to look at anything else, and they did not see the children cowering in the brush, who waited until the noise of the chase had ceased, and then started for their safe hiding home place.

The boy's knees were so weak from fear and excitement that he fell just as he plunged out of the brush into the trail, and his antlers caught the string that had been around Red Fox's neck, and when he arose it hung to them as he ran wildly away. They reached home in a very short time, where they remained quietly until the next morning, congratulating themselves on their narrow escape from capture and death. The string that had caught on his antlers fell off inside the inclosure when he leaped over the hedge after his exciting run. He saw it lying on the ground the next day, but did not know how it got there until his sister told him that it was brought on his antlers. They saw a round flat stone with a hole in it through which the string was tied. It looked like any other stone, and they wondered why Red Fox had been wearing it around his neck. They let it remain where it was and paid no more attention to it.

Several months passed by with nothing to alarm them, and they were beginning to hope their troubles were over. One day they traveled a long distance through a part of the forest that was new to them, and in the evening were so far from home that they concluded to look for some good hiding-place for the night. There was much undergrowth away off to the left, and they went to it, hoping to find an open spot behind the hedge, like their home place.

When they got near they heard a noise like the snapping of a twig beneath the hoof of a caribou. They stood quite still, waiting to hear it again, and they were startled by a bleat, inviting them to leap over the hedge and come into the open place behind.

"Who are you?" the boy inquired. "Are you alone?"

"Yes, I am alone, and have been for a long time," was the answer.

Over they went, finding an inclosure very much like their home place, and recognizing a young caribou that had walked beside them when Red Fox was driving them to the cave.

"Where are the other caribou?" inquired the girl.

"I don't know. They may be all dead and eaten by this time. Red Fox came every day with wolves and bears, and took away four or five of them which I never saw again," was the answer.

"How long have you been alone?" they asked.

"Ever since the sun rose over there," pointing to where was meant.

This agreed with the time the bears chased Red Fox, and they told the stranger all that had happened at that time.

"Maybe they killed Red Fox," bleated the stranger.

"I hope they did," replied the sister.

"I don't feel afraid of him any more," bleated the boy.

"Neither do I," said the stranger.

They agreed to remain together, and also to look for the rest of the caribou, if any were to be found alive.

There was plenty of food and water in this inclosure, which made it a safe place to live entirely hidden from observation. The brook that ran through gave nourishment to some very toothsome grass along its banks, which pleased them very much, and they told the stranger of their home place at the other end of the forest, but said they would remain here, as it was just as good a place, though not quite so well protected with undergrowth.

The winter passed quietly, and summer was coming on. They had seen no other animal since meeting with the stranger, but now their peaceful life was disturbed by hearing bears sometimes, and one morning they were startled to hear the growling of a bear close by their inclosure.

"If old Red Fox finds what he is looking for, he will make us suffer for chasing him," growled one.

"What do you think it is?"

"I don't know. If I did, I would look for it myself."

They passed on out of hearing, and the children breathed a little more freely.

"What were they talking about?" asked the stranger.

"Something that Red Fox was looking for," replied the sister.

"I wonder if it is that stone with the string tied to it," bleated the boy.

"What would he want with an old stone?" queried the sister.

"Well, why did he have it tied around his neck?" he retorted.

"We don't know anything about it even if we knew for what he was looking," said the stranger.

But this knowledge was to come, and from Red Fox himself. They saw him several times during the next few months, and he saw them, but made no attempt to bite them now. He looked as if he were searching for something that he had lost, and sometimes they heard him snarling to himself as he passed their hiding-places, but could make nothing out of the few words they heard, until one day he sat on his heels just beside the hedge behind which they were lying down after eating.

"I know that I tied a good knot in the string," he snarled. "It could not have come untied. It must have caught on something and got broken, but I can't see why I did not feel the pull, if that was the way it got lost."

They heard him plainly, and listened eagerly for more, and after a while he began again: "I don't know how I could have lost it. I have been over every trail in the forest, but could not find it," he soliloquized. "But there is one consoling thought to me: there is no animal knows that it gives power to the wearer to change himself or others into another kind of animal. They don't know that it makes all other animals fear the wearer."

He was quiet for some time after snarling his thoughts aloud, and they thought he was sleeping, but in a short while they heard him moving off, snarling to himself as he went.

They waited in silence for a while to give him time to get out of hearing, and then jumped over the hedge to make sure he was gone. They could see him a long way off on the trail, and then they began to talk.

"He lost his power! Now if we can find it, whatever it is, we can change ourselves back into children again!" excitedly exclaimed the sister.

"What! Were you changed from children?" asked the stranger.

"Yes, we were children when we ran over the hill that time you first saw us," she answered, "and we don't know how we turned into caribou."

"I was a boy, too," said the stranger. "My name was Mukpik. I was fishing on the river one day, got sleepy and fell into the water, and when I struggled out I was a caribou. Red Fox was biting my heels to make me run to where I saw a large herd of caribou."

They told him of their parents coming after them, and they were afraid they also were changed into caribou, and, most likely, killed and eaten.

"I am going to get that piece of string with the stone tied to it and see if it will give me any power to change myself back to a boy again," bleated the boy.

"We might as well try it. It may be the very thing that Red Fox is looking for," cried the sister excitedly. "Come, let us go and get it."

Away they went on a run, and passed Red Fox as he was sitting dejectedly at the edge of the brush near where he had lost the stone. It did not take them long to get to the old home place and leap over the hedge, but it did take them some time to find the string, as the grass had grown quite thickly all over the place since they had left it.

"Here it is," bleated the sister. "Now let us see if it will change us."

"Be careful. You might break it," said Mukpik.

"How will we tie it around your neck? We have no fingers."

"Red Fox had no fingers, either, but he must have tied it in some way," answered the boy. "Each of you take one end in your mouth, and I will put my head under, and then one of you can chew the ends together under my neck, and that will answer, I think."

They each took an end and held it out straight, with the stone hanging in the middle. The boy put his head under and then raised it up, and the sister chewed the ends together, as suggested.

Then they stood looking at each other, but nothing happened. They had not realized how much they expected from this moment. It was a great disappointment!

"It must be something else Red Fox is looking for," said the boy dejectedly, and then he sighed and said: "Oh! I wish I were a boy again."

The wish was scarcely uttered when Mukpik and the sister leaped backward from the boy in affright. But their fear as suddenly turned to joy. He was a boy again.

How he yelled! "Hal lay! Hal lay!" He rolled on the grass and moss. He leaped to his feet again and ran around the inclosure like a crazy fox in summer time. But he cooled off enough to think of the others when he heard them bleating piteously. He could now also change them. But how? How had he been changed?

"How did I become changed?" he asked.

"As soon as you wished you were a boy again," answered Mukpik.

"I wish you were children again," said he immediately, and to their great joy they were instantly changed!

The secret was discovered.

Oh! What hugging and crying there was then! They shouted and leaped. They were almost crazy, they were so happy. They became exhausted at last, and lay on the grass until they recovered from their excitement. The boy made sure to tie the string securely, and hung the stone inside of his parka, so that there would be no danger of losing it, as Red Fox had done.

"Now we can go back to the river, and maybe find our parents yet alive," said Ahneevuk, for this was the girl's name.

Soosook, the boy, agreed with this resolution, but Mukpik had parents somewhere, and they might be around this part of the country in the shape of some animal. Would they not wait and change every animal into people, if possible?

"That is a good idea. We will change Mukpik into a raven and he can fly around and spread the news, so that all who may have been changed may come to us and be transformed."

This was done instantly, and Mukpik flew away, croaking the good news as he went. Whenever he saw an animal, he flew over him croaking, and in a short time animals of all kinds were running to the children to be changed to their former shape. Only those that had been people could be changed to their former shape.

As soon as they came in sight of the boy, the change began, and they were dancing and shouting for joy when they reached him in human form. Wolves became hunters who had been changed when they were seeking food for their families at home. That big green-eyed lynx was the father of Mukpik! A wolverine was his mother! One of the large bears was the children's uncle. Some squirrels and mice turned into boys and girls. Before the sun had moved very far on his rounds there were fifty people shouting and crying out their joy and thankfulness for their restoration to their own shape.

The raven came back and perched on the ground near the boy, and sat there for some time with drooping wings, in a very dejected manner, until Ahneevuk noticed him and told her brother. He was changed instantly, and immediately sprang into his father's arms, but his mother tore him away and almost hugged him to death. Oh! What rejoicing! What a time that was!

But what animal is that coming this way? Why, it is Red Fox! Did he expect to be changed?

"What do you want?" asked the boy.

"I want to be changed into a man again," snarled Red Fox.

"Were you ever a man?" asked the boy.

"Yes. I am Mukpik's uncle. Mukpik's father married the girl I loved, and I went crazy over it. I found that string around my neck one day, but I don't know how it got there. I used to wish many evil things would happen to my enemies, and everything came as I wished, so I changed everybody that came on the river into different kinds of animals, and I changed myself into a red fox to bite them," he snarled.

"Well, you wanted to be a fox, so you may remain one until you die," said Soosook, and everybody applauded this decision. Red Fox sneaked off with his tail hanging low, and every fox since that time carries his tail in the same way.

Several wolves were prowling around not far away, and Soosook ordered them to get food for the people, and in a short time a herd of caribou came close, driven by the wolves, and soon everybody had enough to eat.

The next morning all started for the river, which was reached late that evening. The children were too impatient to wait for morning to look for traces of their parents. They started to walk down the river to where they had turned aside that fateful day, and soon reached it, but to their surprise there was an igloo just at the place where they had turned away.

"Oh! It may be our parents!" exclaimed Ahneevuk.

"Let us go quietly to the window and listen," said Soosook. This was done, and to their inexpressible delight they heard their mother's voice!

They did not wait to hear what she was saying, but with cries of joy rushed for the door of the igloo and sprang into their parents' arms. Oh! How could their hearts stand it! They almost burst from joy! What a joyous reunion that was! Surely, nobody in the world had ever been so happy as they.

They told their stories after they got settled, but the loving glances and sympathy told another story, as well as their words. How the parents had mourned for their lost children! How gray their hair had grown!

When Soosook had finished his tale, the father advised him to destroy the stone and string by burning it in the fire, saying that no good could come out of a thing that had been the cause of so much sorrow. His advice was considered good, and the evil thing was burned until it crumbled into sand and ashes.

The next day all the people assembled and concluded to build a village here on the river bank. There was plenty of wood lying along the river's edge with which to build their igloos, because every spring when the weather became warmer and the ice in the river broke, many trees were torn from their far inland river banks and carried down with the ice.

They also built the usual large "Happy House," in which everybody could meet and feast together occasionally. There being now no fear of danger from any evil influence, everybody was happy.

Every little while during the winter that followed they would see Red Fox sneaking around the outskirts of the village with his tail hanging low, with a droop at the end.

Let Them Hunt for It.

A MINISTER in a local church known for his absent-mindedness by the members of his own family, but not to his congregation, saved himself from complete exposure at a recent service by his quick wit.

He had studied his sermon carefully, but had neglected to make any notations of the number of the chapter and verse from which the text was taken. In the pulpit he announced the text and then stopped short while the congregation waited to hear from what place in the Bible it was taken.

As he noticed absence of notes to this fact he quickly announced, "I'm going to give you a week to find from what chapter and verse this phrase was taken." So was exposure averted.—[Columbus Dispatch.

Famine.

CAPT. NEIL LUCAS of the English army, while on an official mission to this country, said at a recent dinner in New York:

"The newspaper paragraphers tell us that there is no wax in sealing wax, no cat in catgut and no rice in rice paper."

Capt. Lucas smiled.

"The Germans, thanks to our food blockade," he added, "now perceive that by the same token there is no fare in warfare."—[Washington Star.

Told Her What to Do.

MIKE had just come over from the old country to work with his brother, who was butler in a millionaire's home. It was a morning custom for Mrs. Rich to have several chats with her friends over the telephone. Sometimes these talks stretched well into the forenoon. James, the brother, was tired of this, and inducted Mike, the greenhorn, into the work.

The first morning Mike tried his hand disaster resulted. Mrs. Bucks called up.

"Answer that," ordered Jimmy to Mike. "If it is Mrs. Bucks tell her to 'hold the line.'"

Mike took down the receiver and listened.

"Is Mrs. Rich there," a voice asked.

No answer from Mike.

"Who is at the 'phone?" in a madder tone.

"It's me, Mike."

"I want Mrs. Rich—this is Mrs. Bucks," said the lady in anger.

"All right," said Mike. "Just hold the rope."—[Baltimore American.

Gave Her His Seat.

"TAKE this seat, madam." The subway car was crowded and a young lady with a strikingly beautiful face and sylphlike figure had just entered as these words were uttered. The speaker, a fine, manly little fellow of 13, had risen at once and stood smiling in front of her, prompt to obey the generous impulse that had inspired him.

So unusual a sight in a New York subway car could not but awaken surprise. The passengers craned their necks. Some tittered audibly, and a horrified look came over the face of the fair passenger as she indignantly turned her back to the precocious youth, who straightway resumed his old position. He had been sitting on his father's knee.—[Chicago News.

The Only Way.

MAYOR CURLEY of Boston was talking about a censored film.

"A very objectionable film," he said. "So objectionable, in fact, I'd hesitate to describe it to you. Of course, they say it serves a moral purpose. Well!"

Mayor Curley shrugged his shoulders.

"Such a way of circulating morality," he resumed, "is as unsatisfactory as the cynical lady's way of keeping husbands at home.

"A young wife, bursting into tears, asked this lady:

"'Tell me, oh, tell me, how can I keep my husband home at night?'

"The female cynic laughed bitterly and answered:

"'Go out yourself.'"—[Washington Star.

Not Hurt Seriously.

A CART containing a number of field hands was being drawn by a mule. The driver, a darky of about 20, was endeavoring to induce the mule to increase his speed, when suddenly the animal let fly with its heels and dealt him such a kick that he was stretched on the ground in a twinkling. He lay rubbing his woolly pate where the mule had kicked him.

"Is he hurt?" asked a stranger anxiously of an old negro who had jumped from the conveyance and was standing over the prostrate driver.

"No, boss," was the reassuring reply; "dat mule will probably walk kind o' tender for a day or two, but he ain't hurt."—[National Food Magazine.

Short on Apple Pies.

THERE was gloom on the face of the Iowa farmer.

"What's the matter, Elijah?" asked his nearest neighbor. 'Flapjacks given out over to your house?"

"More'n that," said Elijah. "You know, 'twasn't apple year, and wife says we can't have any more pie for breakfast."

"Can't you make out if you have apple pie noon and night?"

"I can, because I've got to," said Elijah, "but I tell you it upsets me, starting the day wrong like that."—[Chicago News.

A Helping Hand.

"OUR shipping, thanks to the war, is in a bad way," said Representative Ira Copley in Aurora. "It needs a helping hand.

"Yes, our shipping needs the helping hand of somebody as resolute and forthright as the young lady to whom a bashful suitor said:

"'That's a beautiful dog you have there, Miss Ethel. Is he affectionate?'

"'Is he?' she answered archly. 'Here, Bruno! Here, good dog, come and show Charlie Smith how to kiss me.'"—[Washington Star.

Not so Surprising.

"SO YOU came from New York?" said an English lady to a traveling American. "I supposed, of course, you came from Boston?"

"Why did you think that?" asked the New York lady.

"Because I supposed all cultivated, intelligent Americans came from Boston."

"But what in the world made you think that?" was the natural question.

"Oh, I don't know exactly. I think it was a Boston lady who told me."—[Christian Register.

Induction.

A WELL-KNOWN detective said, concerning a failure:

"I am afraid I didn't use sufficient induction in this case. I wasn't as inductive as Jim Lanigan's daughter.

"Jim Lanigan is a drummer. He's hardly home once in three months. He heard his little daughter on the front porch talking to the cat during his last home call.

"'Kitty,' she said, 'I know all your little boys and girls, and I know your mama and sister, too, who lives over at auntie's, but I ain't never seen your husband or your papa —I guess they must be drummers.'"—[Washington Star.

His One Remark.

DONALD was an old Scotch beadle who officiated in a highland kirk where the minister, never a bright star at any time, believed in long, rambling sermons. A stranger once asked him his opinion of the sermons. "Ah, weel," replied Donald, you'll no' get me to say anything against them, for they're a' very guid; but I'll just remark this much: 'The beginnin's aye ower far frae the end, and it wad greatly improve the force of it if he left oot a' that com' in atween.'—[Chicago News.

Come to Stay.

HE WAS paying a visit to his friend, but that worthy being upstairs for some reason or other, he had no option but to wait downstairs.

Presently a little boy of 5 entered the room. "Good afternoon, Mr. Black," he exclaimed shyly.

Mr. Black returned the salutation, but neither spoke again for quite five minutes. Then the boy suddenly burst out:

"You don't know what we got upstairs."

"No, I don't, Jackie. What is it?"

"It's a dear little new baby sister."

"How nice!" exclaimed Mr. Black. "And is she going to stay with you?" he added by way of keeping up the conversation.

"I 'spect so," came the thoughtful answer. "She's got her things off, anyway."—[New York American.

Severe Measures Demanded.

A WOMAN went into a New York police station and began reading the Bible to the officers in charge. She was arrested promptly and taken to the Bellevue Hospital insane ward and subjected to observation.

This recalls the story of the man who went into Westminster Abbey and knelt in the aisle to pray.

Up ran a verger, who collared the kneeling man and proceeded to turn him over to the police.

The man objected, whereupon the verger replied:

"If I don't make an example of you, sir, we'll have people prayin' all over the church!"—[Cleveland Plain Dealer.

He Spelt It.

BRIDE and groom they were, unmistakably, and the guests writing "Wish you were here" greetings in that Atlantic City hotel were much interested in them. Each sat at a desk and got busy with pen and ink, the silence being broken only when the bride asked how to spell a word. These queries annoyed an old gentleman writing near by, and he was plainly relieved when the bridegroom left the room. The little bride did not know that she had been deserted and she again got stuck on a word.

"How do you spell Cincinnati, honey?" she asked.

"C-i-n-c-i-n-n-a-t-i-h-o-n-e-y," responded Mr. Grouch.—[Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Good Idea.

THE serious-looking man was trying hard to listen to the speaker's eloquence, but the squalling of an infant in the row of seats directly ahead gave him little opportunity. Annoyance gave way to irritation, and irritation in turn was superseded by resolve. He leaned forward, touched the mother on the shoulder and in a dispassionate tone asked:

"Has your baby been christened yet?"

"Why, no, sir. Why do you ask?"

"Merely because I was about to suggest that if he had not been christened you might name him 'Good Idea.'"

"And why 'Good Idea?'" asked the woman.

"Because," the man struggled hard to repress his feelings, "it should be carried out."—[Philadelphia Public Ledger.

He Would Reciprocate.

"THE palm for absent-mindedness," says a Princeton man, "is probably due a learned professor on the faculty of my university.

"One day this professor noticed his wife placing a large bouquet on his desk.

"'What does that mean?' he asked.

"'Why,' she exclaimed, 'don't you know that this is the anniversary of our marriage?'

"'Ah, indeed, is it?' said the professor, politely. 'Kindly let me know when yours comes around, and I will endeavor to reciprocate the favor.'"—[Harper's Magazine.

Fish and Philosophy.

THE two vacationers had fished an hour without a nibble to reward them.

"At a time like this," said the first man, "old Izaak Walton would have indulged in philosophy. Have you anything philosophical on your mind you might work off just now to relieve the monotony?"

"Nothing but this," replied the other man. "I suppose it is by refusing to bite and compelling fishermen to philosophize that fish get the reputation of being brainfood."—[Chicago News.

A Square Deal.

WHEN the jury in a western court found the accused guilty of the crime charged, the prisoner rose in the dock and dramatically exclaimed:

"May heaven strike me dead if I am guilty!"

The judge waited a few minutes and then said:

"Prisoner at the bar, since Providence has not seen fit to interfere, the sentence of the court will now be pronounced."—[New York Times.

The Sea of Atmosphere.

[Letter to the New York Sun:] We hear a lot about how great a body is the Pacific Ocean, but we rarely hear about how vast a body is the atmosphere, the terrestrial ocean in which we dwell. For our atmosphere is an ocean, just as much as the Pacific or any other of the oceans. It is far less dense and is composed of a different arrangement of chemical elements.

We rarely hear of our atmosphere being spoken of as an ocean because it lies all around us; we are wholly accustomed to it, and because, as a rule, we do not feel its presence. It is true that a cubic foot of water weighs some sixty-two and a half pounds, whereas a cubic foot of air would not be noticeable as far as weight is concerned; but, nevertheless, as we all know, air does have weight, and, as we are walking about the atmosphere is pressing upon us with a pressure of around fourteen and seven-tenths pounds to the square inch.

Fortunately for us, our tissues and bones are full of air, and this interior air of our bodies has the same pressure outward of fourteen and seven-tenths pounds that the exterior air has inward against our bodies. So the inward and the outward pressures are exactly the same; we feel no discomfort except when the inward or the outward pressure is not normal, as, for example, when we climb a high mountain. To understand more clearly how important and vital it is that these inward and outward pressures be the same, it may be stated that our atmosphere presses upon each square foot of surface with the weight of 2117 pounds, more than a ton. Now as the total surface of a human body of middle size contains about sixteen square feet, were there no resisting pressure, such a body would be at once overwhelmed by a total air weight of 33,869 pounds, or almost seventeen tons.

Thus it is very evident that air does have a good deal of weight, particularly when it is in swift motion during some big storm. Composed, as it is, of gases (usually invisible,) just as water is composed of gases, the gases of our atmosphere being nitrogen, oxygen, argon, carbon dioxide, hydrogen and so on, our terrestrial air may truly be called an ocean. Moreover, our atmosphere contains a large amount of water vapor, and at times the outdoor air, although not quite as wet as the ocean, certainly resembles water to a greater or lesser degree.

We do not know the exact depth of this vast atmospheric ocean; but we do know that it wholly covers our earth, and that means a total terrestrial area of about 197,000,000 square miles. Truly, the ocean of air amid which we are born, dwell and die, which protects us from the perils of bombarding aerolites but not against the dangers of shells and high explosives, is a stupendous ocean compared with which the "mighty" Pacific is a shallow and small salt sea.
